The territory of Greece is nearly all mountainous, the culminating point of the whole is Mount

Guiona in Phocis, lat. 38° 38' 40" N., lon. 22° 16' 24" E., 8,239 feet in elevation. The principal chain, that of Pindus, enters the country on the N., and Mount Othrys, one of its branches, forms the greater part of the N. boundary of Greece. S. of this, the principal chain, turns S.E. and, forms two branches, Ceta on the N., and Par-nassus on the S. Another chain extends from Cape Marathon in the channel of the Egripos, W. to the Morea, which it enters by the Isthmus of Corinth. The centre of the Morea forms an elevated table-land, enclosed by three mountain chains, the most extensive of which crosses the peninsula on the N. The coasts are elevated, irregular, and deeply indented; the principal gulfs are those of Arta, Volo, Lepanto or Corinth, Ægina or the Saronic Gulf, Argolis, Laconia, Koron, Arcadia. Chief capes Marathon and Colonna or Sunium in Attica, Malea, Matapan, Gallo, and Klarenza in the Morea. Greece has numerous streams, but they are mostly rapid and unfit for navigation; the princip. are, on the continent, the Aspropotamos, an afflu. of the Ionian Sea, only the lower course of which belongs to Greece; the Phidaris, which flows S. to the Gulf of Patras, the Hellada, an afflu. of the channel of Talanti & the Cephissus, which flow S. to the Gulf of Ægina. The chief rivers in the Morea are the Peneus and Alpheus on the W., and the Pamisus and Euro-tas on the S. The only extensive lake is Topo-lais, ancient Copais, between Thebes and Bœotia. Climate temperate and generally healthy, except in some parts of the coasts, and in the vicinity of the lakes, violent storms occur in spring and autumn. Earthquakes are rare. Caverns, mineral and gaseous springs are numerous. Minerals are rich and varied, but little worked; marble and other building materials are abundant.

Vegetable products vary according to elevation of the soil. The olive, fig, currant-grape of Corinth, vine, melons, rice, cotton, the orange, date, citron, and pomegranate are cultivated on the coasts, and in dists. situated at an elevation of 1,600 feet, where also the myrtle, the mastic, and the plane tree flourish. Above 6,000 feet in elevation, great part of the mountains are covered with pine forests. The principal domestic animals are sheep and goats; bees are still extensively reared; wild animals are numerous, and game abundant. Manufs., which are mostly domestic and very inconsiderable, comprise silks, chiefly in the island of Tinos, cottons, woollens, coarse pottery, leather, and beet root sugar. Salt, extracted chiefly from the lagoons of Mes-solonghi, is the most important mineral product. The principal resource of the inhabitants of Greece has always been in maritime commerce, and this, long interrupted by the war of independence, has lately begun to revive, especially with Turkey. The principal ports are Athens (the Piræus), Patras, Nauplia, Syra, Kalamata, and Navarino. The pop. belong to the ancient Greek race in the W. of the continental portion and E. of Par-nassus; in the Morea the same race prevails, but here it is more mixed. The pop. of the islands is a mixture of Albanians and Greeks. The great majority belong to the Greek church. Greece was erected into a kingdom under Otho, second son of the King of Bavaria, 30th August 1832. The government was at first nearly absolute monarchy; the revolution of September 1843 introduced a constitution; & in March 1844, a government, on the basis of those of England and France, was proclaimed. The king exercises the power of the executive, and commands the army and navy. The chief tribunals are, a court of cassation at Athens, 2 royal courts, 10 tribunals of premiere instance, and 3 tribunals of commerce. The chief educational establishments are, the university at Athens; 5 gymnasia, at Athens, Syra, Nauplia, Patras and Hydra; a normal, polytechnic, a military, and a naval school. Public expenditure (1845) 661,104*l.*; revenue 554,972*l.*; deficit 106,132*l.* In 1845 the army consisted of 8,919 men, of whom 210 were cavalry. The navy consisted of 26 gun corvettes, several steam-packets and smaller vessels. The mercantile marine, in 1835, had 3,314, and in 1846, 3,820 vessels.

Mean temp. of year  $48^{\circ} .9$ ; winter  $37^{\circ} .7$ ; summer  $60^{\circ} .3$  Fahr. It is mostly well built, though many of the streets are narrow. It has a fine pa. church. Its chief edifice is the magnificent naval hospital, the noblest establishment of the kind in Europe, with the finest palatial structure in England. It occupies the site of the royal palace of Placentia, a favourite residence of the Tudors and Stuarts, & was commenced in the reign of Charles II., and in the reign of William III. granted as an asylum for disabled seamen of the navy, and completed gratuitously by Sir C. Wren, by the aid of parliamentary grants & private contributions. It consists of 4 noble quadrangles between the Thames and Greenwich Park. On the river side is a terrace 865 feet in length, forming one side of the grand square; the buildings on the two other sides of which are surmounted by two conspicuous domes of beautiful proportions. At the head of this square is the older portion of the palace, built by Inigo Jones. This hospital, which is on certain days open to the public, contains dormitories and dining-halls for about 2,700 old or disabled seamen (besides whom a much greater number of out-pensioners live out of the building), a beautiful chapel, with rich carved work, and a painting by West of the shipwreck of St Paul; a spacious hall 106 feet in height by 56 in breadth, decorated with representations of sea-fights, statues, and portraits of naval heroes. Detached from the edifice are the buildings of a school for the sons of naval officers & seamen. Greenwich Hospital was, in 1732, enriched with the forfeited estates of Lord Derwentwater. The management of its revenue is vested in commissioners under the Admiralty: in 1839, including a parl. grant of 20,000*l.*, it amounted to 137,954*l.*; expenditure 134,233*l.*—Greenwich Park, between the hospital and Blackheath, first enclosed by Duke Humphrey of Gloucester, protector, in the reign of Henry VI., contains about 200 acres of undulating and wooded land, has numerous herds of deer, and is a good deal resorted to by the Londoners. On one of its eminences, 160 feet above the river, and once occupied by Greenwich Castle, is the Royal Observatory, founded by Charles II., 1674, the residence of the astronomer royal, & from which the longitudes in all British charts are reckoned. Greenwich has various endowed charities, comprising a grey coat school for about 120 boys, rev. about 800*l.* per annum; a green coat school, endowed for 26 boys, rev. 600*l.* to 700*l.*; a girls' school, an hospital or college for 20 pensioners, founded by Lambard the antiquary, in 1558, rev. GUATEMALA, or GUATIMALA, the largest of the states of Central America, extending, together with NICARAGUA, COSTA RICA, and the MOSQUITO TERRITORY, from lat. 8° to 18° N., and lon. 84°

30° to 94° W.; exclusive of these Guatemala proper, extends between lat. 14° and 17° N., and lon. 89° and 94° W., having N. Yucatan, and Mexico, E. Honduras and San Salvador, S.W. the Pacific. Area 75,098 sq. m. Pop. 700,000, larger portion aboriginal Indians, the other whites and Mestizos. The surface is very irregular, consisting of mountains, table-lands from 2,000 to 5,000 feet in elevation, & plains. The mtns. are generally of volcanic origin, with several active volcanoes. Earthquakes are very frequent. Climate of the coast-valleys very hot and unhealthy, of the elevated country more temperate; rainy season commences in June, dry season from October till May, N. winds prevail in December and January. For metals & other products see Central America, Costa Rica, &c. In the years 1846-7, the total exports amounted in value to 1,014,865 dollars, comprising silver to 932,820 dolls., cochineal to 70,000 do., indigo to 9,000 do., other exports being cochineal, cigars, sarsaparilla, mahogany, cocoa, hides, and dye-woods. Value of imports in same year 838,279 dollars. Principal cities, New and Old Guatemala, Quezaltenango, Coban, and Chequimul.—New Guatemala, the cap., is situated in a rich and spacious plain, at an elevation of 4,961 feet, 106 m. W.N.W. San Salvador Lat. 14° 37' N., lon. 90° 30' W. Pop. variously estimated from 35,000 to 50,000. It is very handsome, being stated to have the general aspect of the best class of Italian cities, is well supplied with water by a long aqueduct on arches, and extends over a large space; the prevalence of earthquakes causing the houses to be built of only one story. The temp. varies between 60° & 80° Fahr., and rarely exceeds either of these points. In the great square are situated the old vice-regal palace, most of the government offices, the cathedral, an archbishop's palace, & college des infantes, barracks, and most of the principal shops; in its centre is a magnificent public fountain. Here are upwards of 60 richly ornamented churches, a new fort, a good cemetery and hospital, a bull-ring, theatre, university, and various schools. The conventual buildings are now mostly appropriated to lay-purposes. The inhabs. are noted for their aptitude in arts and manufs.; they produce muslins, fine cotton yarn, silver articles, artificial flowers, and embroidery, of high excellence. New Guatemala has a flourishing trade with Vera Cruz, Mexico, &c., in sugar, coffee, cotton, dye-woods, & other native products. GÜERNSEY, the second in size of the Channel, or Anglo-Norman Islands, in the Bay of St Michael, 30 m. W. the coast of Normandy, and 51 m. S. of Portland, English coast, and 15 m. W.N.W. Jersey. Area 16,000 ac. Pop. 28,521. Its form is triangular, and its coast-line, of about 30 m. in circumference, is deeply indented with bays, and surrounded by sunken rocks. Surface gently varied, but generally sloping from the S.—where the cliffs are lofty—to the N. coast, which is low. It is well watered. Soil rests on a structure almost every where granitic, and is, with the aid of sea-weed manure, rendered very fertile. Climate moist, but healthy, and so mild, that oranges, melons, figs, myrtles, & the Guernsey lily, flourish luxuriantly. Wood is not plentiful, fences are commonly of stone or turf; and in the N. are many tracts of heath. Farms average from 5 to 12 ac., the land being greatly subdivided under the law which gives in each son an equal share in his father's landed property. Rents vary from 10s. to 10l. an ac. Chief crops are vegetables, wheat, barley, & apples for cider. The orchards likewise furnish pasture for the famous breed of cows, which are larger and more valued than even those of Alderney, & yield, on an average, 1 lb. per day, throughout the year, of the finest butter. Large hogs are numerous. Manufs. are of no importance. Trade, or rather smuggling, has greatly declined since 1807, when the exports from these islands were made subject to our general revenue laws. The shipping, which in 1839, comprised about 100 vessels, averaging 100 tons each, was mostly employed in importing British manufs., and in exporting cider, potatoes, cattle, and granite. They also carry S. American produce to the Mediterranean, in exchange for wine, which is again exchanged in Hamburg for corn. Duties are very moderate, and provisions extremely cheap. Steamers ply between Guernsey and London, Southampton, Plymouth, and Weymouth. The isl. is divided into 10 par., forming a deanery of the church of England, in diocese of Winchester. St Peter's, on the S.E. coast, is the only town in the island, which is mostly studded with scattered houses or cottages, emhosomed in orchards. The natives of the lower orders speak the old Norman French; they have long been remarkable for their adherence to Protestantism. The isl. is under a lieut.-gov., who represents the sovereign in the assembly of the states, a parliamentary body composed of 12 jurats, with 8 rectors and 2 constables of each pa., and 132 douzaniers from the whole island. These have the power, with the sanction of the crown, of making laws and imposing taxes. The latter are very moderate, producing an annual rev. of about 10,000l. The royal court has jurisdiction over all the Channel Isla. except Jersey. Guernsey formed a part of the duchy granted by Charles the Simple to the Norman Rollo, to whose descendants it has now belonged for nearly 1,000 years. The French have made many vain attempts to capture it. It is defended by strong fortifications, and has a well organised militia.

Amer., comprising all of that continent between the Amazon and Orinoco rivers, extending from lat 3° 30' S. to 8° 40' N., & lon. 50° to 68° W., and subdiv. into Brazilian (formerly Portuguese), British, Dutch, French, and Venezuelan (formerly Spanish) Guiana; it was discovered near the end of the 15th century. The Dutch formed the first settlement in 1590, near Demerara riv.; the English, in 1590, near Berbice and Surinam. In 1667, the English settlements were given up to the Dutch, but again re-occupied by the English; and in 1814, the settlements between the Corentyn & Marony rivs. were restored to the Dutch.—I. (Brazilian Guiana) comprises the N. part of the Braz. dom. between lat. 3° 30' S., and 4° 20' N., & lon. 50° and 69° W., bounded N. by the Sierras Juraguaca, Pacaraima, and Acarai, which separate it from the other divisions of Guiana, W. and S. by the Rio Negro and Amazon rivs., and having E. the Atlantic. Area roughly estimated at 433,000 sq. m. It is traversed by the Rio Branco, and numerous other rivers; is mostly covered by a dense vegetation; peopled chiefly by roving Indian tribes, and divided between the provs. Para and Rio Negro, which last territory, however, can scarcely be considered as actually under Brazilian rule.—II. (British Guiana), a colonial territory on the N.W. coast of S. America, belonging to Great Britain, and generally considered to extend from the Atlantic between lat. 6° and 8° 40' N., as far southward as lat. 0° 40' N., and from the 57th to the 61st degree of W. lon., having E. Dutch, S. Brazilian, and W. Venezuelan Guiana, and comprising an area of 76,000 sq. m., but the possession of much of this has been disputed by Brazil and Venezuela. The European pop. are mostly descendants of the Dutch settlers. The African negroes are more numerous than the Europeans. The amount of the native tribes unknown. Pop. of the settled portion (1843) 98,133; exclusive of Indians, 30,980.

Surface, near the ocean, a rich alluvial flat, and extending in mud banks into the sea. This plain extends inland from 10 to 40 m.; it then ascends by successive terraces to the Sierras Pacaraima and Acarai, on the S.W. and S. frontiers; near the W. boundary, Mount Roraima rises to an elev. of 7,500 ft. Princip. rivs., the Essequibo, Demerara, Berbice, and Corentyn, the last forming its E. border. There are two rainy seasons on the coast, the great, from Dec. to Feb., followed by a lesser till April, when the great rains prevail again from May till the end of July. In the interior there is only one rainy season, from April till the middle of August. Temperature ranges from 75 to 90 deg., mean temp. of the year, 81° Fahr. Prevailing wind, N.E., changes in rainy season to W. The vegetation is perhaps the most luxuriant of any on the surface of the globe. Princip. products are at present sugar, along the coast, and which has progressively superseded there the culture of cotton and coffee, though the latter is still extensively grown on the uplands; rice, maize, wheat, cacao, vanilla, tobacco, and cinnamon are also raised. In 1841, 60,037,510 lbs. of sugar, value 809,871*l.*, were exported (being a greater amount than from any other British colony, Jamaica excepted), with molasses to the value of 126,346*l.*, rum to 162,925*l.*, coffee, 632,315 lbs., cotton, 60,600 lbs., rice, 797,250 lbs. Total value of exports to the U. Kingd. (1842) 963,231*l.*; of imports from do., 549,808*l.* In 1846, 325,756 cwt. of sugar, 129,058 do. of molasses, 906,454 galls. of rum, and 61,694 lbs. of coffee were exported to the U. Kingd. Tot. value of expts. (1844) 1,131,346*l.*, of which amount those to Great Britain stood for 1,094,303*l.* Value of imports, 675,950*l.* In the same year, 550 ships, aggregate burden, 87,937 tons entered; and 569 do., burden, 85,948 tons, cleared from the ports of the colony. Reg. shipping (1844) 72 vessels, aggregate burden, 3,207 tons. Government vested in a governor, council, and the orders of the sovereign in council; the laws of Holland are those mostly in force. Public rev. (1846) 900,000 dols. The colony is divided into the cos. Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo; chief towns, George Town, the cap., and New Amsterdam.—III. (Dutch Guiana, or Surinam), a colonial territory, N.W. coast of S. America, belonging to the Netherlands, between lat. 1° 30' & 6° N., & lon. 53° 30' and 57° 30' W., having E. French, W. English, and S. Brazilian Guiana. Area 10,400 sq. m. Pop. in 1844, 10,536 free; 43,285 slaves; Indians unknown. Natural features are like those of British Guiana. Princip. rivs., the Surinam, in its centre, Marony, on the E., and Corentyn, on the W. frontier. There are many Jews in this country, and the runaway negroes, or Maroons, have formed a colony in the interior. About 25 mill. lbs. of sugar, and 4 mill. lbs. of coffee, are stated to be exported annually; cotton, cacao, rice, cassava, and yams are raised; and other products are fine woods, gums, drugs, and timber, yet the colony is reported not to be flourishing. Imports come chiefly from Holland; though there is some traffic with the W. India islands, and a large smuggling trade with Colombia. Government vested in a gov.-general, and a high council. Chief town, Paramaribo; princip. port, Amsterdam, with a pop. in 1841 of 3,460.—IV. (French Guiana), forms the E. most colonial subd. of Guiana, between lat. 2° and 6° N., and lon. 51° 30', and 54° 30' W., having E. and S. Brazil, W. Dutch Guiana, and N.E. the Atlantic. Area 10,980 sq. m.; and pop. in 1839, 21,170. Surface rises progressively on proceeding inland, and the middle region of the colony is from 1,600 to 2,000 feet above the sea. Rivs. very numerous, and the coast lands appear to be less unhealthy than in Brit. Guiana. Cultivated lands are estimated to occupy 1-80th part of the whole. Products comprise sugar, cotton, the cultivation of which is considerable, cocoa, coffee, cloves, annatto, vanilla, pepper, cinnamon, nutmegs, dyewoods, manioc, rice, maize, and bananas. Value of expts. in 1840, 2,643,212 fr., nearly the whole shipped to France or her colonies; of impts. in same year, 3,645,336 fr. Government vested in a governor, privy council, and colonial council. Public rev. (1837) 255,222 fr.; expend. 1,446,710 fr. French Guiana is divided into the districts Cayenne and Sinnamary. Chief town, Cayenne, the cap.; the rest are insignificant.—V. HALIFAX, a parl. bor., large manufacturing town, and township of England, co. York, W. Riding, on the navigable Calder, and on the Manchester & Leeds railw., 14 m. W.S.W. Leeds. Area of pa., which is one of the largest and most populous in England, 75,740 ac. Pop. of do. 130,743; do. of parl. bor. 26,694. It is picturesquely situated on a declivity, surrounded by lofty heights, and with the exception of a few ancient streets, is mostly built of stone, well paved and lighted. Chief buildings, the piecetail, a vast and handsome stone built quadrangle, containing 315 rooms or warehouses in which the manufacturers keep their cloths for sale, and the pa. church, a fine structure of the 15th cent., and to which about 18 other churches & chapels scattered throughout the pa. are subordinate. Endowed charities (1827) 2,565l. Here are also numerous Dissenters' meeting-houses & schools, several of which, in the rural parts of the pa., are well endowed; a blue coat hospital, founded in 1642, a handsome modern infirmary, a jail belonging to the Duke of Leeds as lord of the manor; a theatre, assembly rooms, public baths, library, literary society's hall with library and museum, mechanics' institute, and several banks. The woollen manuf. was introduced here early in the 15th century, the abundance of water power being probably the great attraction. Since the use of steam, these manufs. have immensely increased, coal also being plentiful in the pa., and the riv. Calder forming a means of communication with Hull on the one side, and Liverpool on the other. The principal staples are shalloons, camlets, figured vestings, moreens, bombazeens, crapes, russets, serges, baizes, coatings, broad & narrow cloths, kerseys, cottons, & silks. In 1838, there were in the pa. 80 worsted, 63 woollen, 71 cotton, and 7 silk mills, employing together 13,579 hands, independent of cottage-weavers. Most of the goods are sold in an unfinished state, to the merchants, in the piece-hall, on Saturday, which is market day. Halifax comprises 19 townships, and is governed by the co. magistrates, who hold petty sessions weekly. It sent two members to H. of C. during the commonwealth, which privilege was restored by the Reform Act. Reg. electors (1848) 1,014. The manor was remarkable in the middle ages for its strict laws against thieves, and for its exercising the power of jurisdiction in capital cases so late as the middle of the 17th century. Outside the town, on the W., is Gibbet hill, where those convicted of theft, to the amount of 13*d.*, were executed by a machine, which was the prototype of the French guillotine. Archbishop Tillotson was born in this pa., A. D. 1630.

HAMBURG, the princip. commerc. city of Germany, cap. of the republic of same name, on r. h. of the Elbe, about 70 m. from its mouth. Lat. 53° 32' 51" N., lon. 9° 58' 33" E. Pop. (1848) 148,754. Mean temp. of year, 48°; winter, 32°; summer, 63°; Fahr. It is about 4 m. in circ., enclosed by planted walks, on the site of its former fortifications, and intersected by canals and branches of the Alster river. Most of its old streets are narrow, dark, and dirty, and the houses of brick, old-fashioned, and ill-built. The banks of the Inner Alster, a lake within the city, form the favourite place of resort for the inhabs., and at certain times the water here is covered with pleasure-boats. Princip. edifices in 1841 comprised the churches of the 5 pas., especially those of St Peter, founded in the 12th century, and of St Michael, with a steeple 456 ft. in height, a fine altar-piece, large organ, crypt, &c., and capable of holding 6,000 persons; the exchange, town-hall, general infirmary, for between 4,000 and 5,000 patients, new orphan asylum, senate house, founded in the 13th cent., bank, Eimbeck-house, workho., prison, arsenal, and two theatres, one of the latter among the largest in Germany, German, French, and English chapels, the Johanneum and another college, a public city library, with 180,000 vols., numerous other libraries, museums, academies, an observatory, botanic garden, learned and other societies, &c. (but the church of St Peter's, and many of the other public buildings, were destroyed by the great conflagration which commenced on the 5th May, 1842, and burned 61 streets, and 120 passages and courts, & left houseless 19,995 of the pop. Since that time, a great portion of the town has been rebuilt according to a regular plan). Manufs. comprise 100 sugar refineries, tar, tobacco, and sail cloth factories, breweries, distilleries, tanneries, cotton printing & dyeing works, anchor & iron forges, and many manufs. of less magnitude. Hamburg is the greatest commercial city of the European continent, its trade embracing every article bought or sold in Germany. Total value of impts. in 1841, 21,568,800*l.*; of exports in do., 18,392,280*l.* The city communicates with Lübeck by a canal, & with Berlin, Brunswick, Hanover, Kiel, and Rendsburg, by railroads. Hambro' is stated to have been founded in the 8th cent., by Charlemagne; early in the 13th century it joined Lübeck in the formation of the Hanse League. Under the French, from 1810 to 1814, it was cap. of the dep. Bouches de l'Elbe. (See also a lengthened article in M'Culloch's Geog. Dict., pp. 953-6.) The territory depending on Hamburg forms a small republic, consisting of the city and district ionmediately around it, the towns Bergedorf and Ritzbüttel, the dists. of Vierländen (the sovereignty of which is shared by Lübeck, Cuxhaven, some islands in the Elbe, and some detached portions of territ., enclosed by the Danish and Hanoverian doms. Area 137 sq. m. Pop. (1848) 188,054. Surface level, watered by the Elbe, Alster, and Bille; and the Vierländen and marsh lands in the river are very productive, being in a great part appropriated to fruit and mkt. gardens. Government vested in a senate of 4 burgomasters, 24 citizens, and 4 representative colleges. Public expend. (1844) 311,700*l.*, and in that year the public debt amounted to 2,976,000*l.*, of which 1,920,000*l.* were contracted to repair the losses occasioned by the great fire in 1842.

E. of that city. Area of pa. 14,240 ac. Pop. 10,862; pop. of town 8,876. It is well built, though irregular, has 2 churches, a good grammar school, 2 poor's hospitals, a subscrip. library, mechanics' instit., trades' hall, 3 branch banks, jail, large cavalry barracks; but its chief object of attraction is the magnificent ducal palace of the house of Hamilton. This has a noble Grecian front, 264 ft. in length, and a superb interior, containing the largest and choicest collect. of paintings and marbles in Scotland. The park is also considered, for scenery and extent, the finest in N. B. Within it are the castle of Chatelherault, another resid. of the Hamiltons, named after their anc. French ducal title, and the picturesque ruins of Cadzow castle, their original family seat. It stands on a lofty rock, washed by the Avon, and surrounded by a chase covered with some of the largest oaks in Britain, among which the famous aborig. breed of wild cattle still feed. Hamilton has been the princip. seat of imitation cambric weaving since the introd. of cotton manufs. into Scotl. About 1,200 looms are employed, and the finest thread is woven. Manufs. of lace, black silk veils, check shirts, and hempen fabrics, are also flourishing. Corp. rev. (1840) 715*l.* The burgh unites with Airdrie, Falkirk, Lanark, and Linlithgow, in sending 1 member to the H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 293. It gives title of duke to the premier peer of Scotland, representative both of the illustrious and originally English house of Hamilton, and of the male line of the Douglas, and owing to the marriage of the first Lord Hamilton with the daughter of James II., A. D. 1474, the next protestant branch of the Royal family, failing the Brunswick line, in succession to the Scot. crown.

Mining district,	944	35,055	Clausthal.
Total, . .	14,811	1,773,711	- -

Surface flat in the N., forming part of the great plain of Germany; and mountains, in the S., where it is covered by offsets of the Harz, highest point, the Königsberg, 3,260 feet in elevation. The coasts are under the level of the sea, from the encroachments of which they are protected by dykes. Hanover is watered by 3 of the chief rivs. of Germany, 1. the Elbe, with its affls. the Oste, Imenau, and Jetze; 2. the Weser, affls. the Wümme, Leine, Aller, Ocker, Innerste, and Hunte; 3. Ems, affls. the Haase and the Vechte, which flow to the Zuyder-zee. On the N. are exten. marshes & numerous lakes; the mntnous. portion is rich in metals. Climate humid, mild in the N., & cold in the S. Mean temp. 48° .6; extremes, 64° .6 to 32° Fahr. Soil generally poor, is most fertile in Bremen and E. Friesland, near the coast. Chief products, barley and oats, potatoes, rye, and vegetables, tobacco, hops, chicory, lint, and hemp. There are extensive forests of firs in the Harz, and of oak and beech at Solling. Cattle form one of the chief riches of the country, and they are an important article of export. The horses of E. Friesland, which are celebrated, are bred for exportn., and there is a gov. stud at Celle. The sheep are of improved breeds, and geese are extensively reared in the polders; bees yield valuable produce in Meppen, Lüneburg, and Verden. The lakes and rivers abound in fish. Mining is the most important branch of industry, the chief products are the metals of the Harz, including iron, copper, lead, litharge, salt, turf, coal, alum, marble and granite. There are several mineral springs, some of which have estabs. of baths. The princip. manuf. is that of linen, the chief seat of which is at Osnabrück, and hempen and woollen fabrics. The manuf. of cotton is limited in extent, and of recent introduction. Paper, soap, leather, and hats are among the other manufs. Brewing, and the manuf. of metals are important branches of industry. Although advantageously situated on the N. Sea, and traversed by navigable rivs., the commerce of Hanover is not extensive. It is conducted mostly by the towns of Bremen and Hamburg. Emden is the chief port. Princip. exports, linens, yarns, and agricultural produce. Imports comprise manuf. goods, colonial produce, wine, and spirits. Besides the navigable rivs., Hanover is traversed by excellent roads, and railways connect the cap. with Hamburg in the N., Brunswick in the E., and Hildesheim in the S. The pop. in the S. belong to the Saxon race, and in the N.W. to the Frisons. In 1845, there were 1,452,103 Luth., 90,128 Calvs., 219,748 R. Caths., and 11,208 Jews. Public instruction is placed under the direction of a superior council; there were, in 1845, 3,561 primary schools, numerous industrial & secondary, polytechnic & elementary schools, 17 gymnasias, and 13 progymnasias. The national seat of learning is the university of Göttingen. There is a school of mines and forestry at Klausthal: milit. & veterinary schools, schools of midwifery, and 5 normal schools. At the dissolution of the French empire, Hanover having reverted to its former sovereigns, the French system of administration was abolished, and the old régime re-established. In 1818, the prov. states voted a constitution, modelled on those of Engl. and France, and in 1833 a new constitution was promulgated. In 1838, Ernest, D. of Cumb., having been called to the throne, on the death of king William IV. of Engl., in virtue of the salique law, abrog. the new constitution, re-established that of 1819, and convoked a new parliament. In consequence of the revolutionary movements of 1848-9, several important modifications in the gov. have taken place. Public rev. (1848-9), estim. at 4,087,955 dolls.; expend. 3,979,224 do. Public debt (1848), 23,233,960. Army (1843) 21,206 men, of whom 2,688 were cavalry, and 300 artillery.

Shores swampy in the E., elsewhere mostly bold, and surrounded by reefs, though there are several excellent harbours in the W., where two long projecting peninsulas enclose the large bay of Gonaives. Climate tropical, and on the plains very unhealthy to Europeans; but the soil is highly fertile, and a great part of the island is covered by dense forests of mahogany, iron-wood, log-wood, cedar, and other valuable timber trees. Products comprise the plantain, vanilla, and manioc, besides ordinary colonial resources; but cultivation and wealth had so much declined, that in 1826, the export of sugar amounted to only 32,864 lbs., that of coffee to 32,190,000 lbs., and that of cotton to 620,972 lbs., the two latter amounts being respectively only about 2-5ths and 1-10th of the exports in 1789, when the isl. was a French colonial possession, and at the height of its prosperity. In 1836, 37,662,674 lbs. of coffee, 6,767,902 do. of log-wood, 4,854,944 feet of mahogany, 1,222,716 lbs. of tobacco, besides cotton, cocoa, cigars, sugar, rags, wax, and ginger, formed the chief exports. Imports comprise Brit. manufs. of most kinds; wines, liqueurs, silks, and other French manufs.; linen fabrics, bagging, woollens, Rhenish wines, & mineral waters from Germany; and lumber, provisions, hides, colonial produce, from the U. S. In 1836, the imports at the principal port were estimated worth 474,782*l.*, and the exports worth 921,336*l.* Gold, silver, copper, tin, iron, and rock salt, are found in the island, but the mines are now unproductive. The government, nominally republican, is in reality a military despotism, the power of the elective president greatly outweighing those of the senate and house of representatives. The high court of justice sits in Cape Haytien, the cap., where also, and at Cayes, St Domingo, Gonaives, Jeremie, Jacmel, Port-au-Prince, and St Jago, the other principal towns, are provincial, civil, and criminal courts. The E. Cath. is the established religion, but all others are tolerated. Public revenue in 1837 amounted to 2,082,522 dollars, in 1841, to 2,600,531 dollars. The debt to France was in 1838 fixed at 60,000,000 fr., to be discharged by six instalments, three of which were in 1846 paid up. Hayti was discovered by Columbus, Dec. 5, 1495, and on its N. coast was planted the first colony, established by Europeans in the W. hemisphere. Spain held possession of the isl. until 1665, when the French obtained a share, and from this period till 1790, the isl. was the most flourishing of all Indian colonies. After this a revolution of the black people took place, the independence of Hayti was proclaimed in 1800, and the French were finally expelled in 1803. Since that period a series of revolutions have occurred, and a sort of elective military government has prevailed under various leaders, the longest, and most vigorous and beneficial, under Christophe. But on the whole education and civilization are at a low ebb, the population are extremely indolent, and the arts and comforts of life little cultivated. In 1846, the Spanish part of the isl. declared the gov. of "Dominica" to be not military, but civil, republican, and representative, with a president, legislature, assembly, & council. In Hayti, or the French portion of the isl., the constitution of 1816 has been adopted, with a president and executive assembly.

HEBRIDES, or WESTERN ISLANDS, Ebude, a series of isls., off the W. coasts of Scotland, betw. lat. 55° 35' and 58° 34' N., and lon. 5° and 8° W., and consisting of two principal groups; the Outer Hebrides,—Lewis, Harris, N. and S. Uist, Benbecula, Barra, and numerous smaller isls. in the cos. Ross and Inverness; and the Inner Hebrides,—Skye, Rum, Eig, Canna, Coll, Tiree, Mull, Iona, Colonsay, Jura, Arran, Bute, &c., partly separated from the former by the channel termed the Little Minch, and lying more immediately off the shores of Inverness and Argyle, in which cos. and in Buteshire they are included. Total number, not including the smaller islets, 160, 70 of which are permanently inhabited. Total area has been estimated about 3,000 sq. m. Pop. probably 115,000. Of 1,592,000 acres of surface, mntns., morasses, lakes, and unproductive soil have been computed to occupy 600,000 ac., pastures 700,000 do., and arable land only 180,000. Geologically the Hebrides are divided into several groups.—

The Gneiss Isls. comprehend the whole of the Outer Hebrides, Lewis, Harris, N. and S. Uist, Tiree, Col, Iona, &c.—The Trap Isls. are Skye, Rum, Eig, Canna, Mull, Ulva, Staffa, & St Kilda.

—The Slate Isls. are Islay, Jura, Gigha, Colonsay, &c.—The Clyde Isls., consisting of trap, sandstone, & limestone, are Bute, Arran, Cumbrays, & Ailsa. Climate moist and chill in Outer Hebrides, much rain in winter, but little snow. Soil of the Gneiss Isls. poor and often peat moss; the trap and sandstone isls. more fertile. Pop. for the most part Celtic. They are generally in the greatest poverty, 4-6ths subsisting almost wholly on potatoes and fish. Principal proprietors are Campbell of Islay, Lord Macdonald, the Duke of Hamilton, Mr Stewart Mackenzie, Mr Matheson, Macleod of Macleod, the Marquis of Bute, and Maclean of Coll; and on the estates of the three former especially, in the isls. Islay, Colonsay, Skye, & Mull, as also in Buteshire, large farms, with improvements in agriculture have been introduced, and the pop. is in a better condition. The Lewis has also undergone great improvements under the proprietorship of Mr Matheson. The introduction of steam navigation has also contributed very much to the improvement of the Inner Hebrides. Aggregate rental, estimated in 1840 at from 110,000l. to 120,000l. The herring fishery, formerly an important resource of the people, has greatly declined, as has the manuf. of kelp, of which, during the war, nearly 6,000 tons were produced, fetching sometimes 20l. per ton. Other manufs. are insignificant and wholly domestic, except some production of cotton stuffs at Rothesay, distilling in Islay, and boat-building at Tobermory, Stornoway, and some other places. The rearing of cattle and sheep is the most profitable branch of industry, and the stock of each is estimated at 120,000. Live stock, including ponies, kelp, wool, cod, ling, herrings, limestone, and slate, are the chief exports; imports are iron, groceries, salt, oatmeal, and in some of the isls. peat-fuel. A few years ago, the Hebrides had 6 branch banks, but no printing press or newspaper, and "the greater number of the isls. are destitute of surgeons, or even of inns." They are divided into 26 quoad civilia pas. In the Outer Hebrides especially, most of the inhabs. are Roman Catholics. Principal vills., Stornoway in Lewis, Portree in Skye, Torosay in Mull, and several in Islay and Buteshire. These isls. were ruled mostly by sovereigns of Norwegian descent from the 9th century till 1264, when they were annexed to the crown of Scotland. The principal isls. are noticed under their respective names.

HEBRIDES (New), an isl. group, Pacific Ocean, between lat. 14° and 20° S., and lon. 168° & 170° E., & E.ward of New Caledonia & the Mallicollo group. Principal isls. comprise Ambrym, Anna-

It has 3 peaks, little elevated above its body, and along its sides are numerous craters, the seats of former eruptions; the crater of its principal peak does not much exceed 100 feet in depth. It is composed chiefly of basalt and lava; but slag-sand and loose ashes cover a great part of its surface, and obsidian is among its most remarkable products. Since A. D. 900, 43 of its eruptions are on record, of which 5 have been simultaneous, or nearly so, with those of Vesuvius, 4 with those of Etna, and 1 with those of both. Its last eruption commenced 2d Sept. 1845, and lasted till 6th April 1846; on the 23d of Nov. the torrent of lava, 2 m. from the crater, was 1 m. in width, and from 40 to 50 feet in depth.

Pop., before its unsuccessful siege by the Persians in 1838, was estimated at 45,000, including many Eimanks, Moguls, Jews, Hindoos, but now probably much less.

A ditch, mound, & bastioned wall, enclose an oblong area 1 m. in length, entered by five gates, the interior divided by four arched bazaars, meeting in a domed quadrangle in the centre of the city. Herat has been stated to contain 4,000 dwelling-houses, 1,200 shops, 17 caravanserais, 20 public baths, some fine reservoirs, and numerous mosques, the principal of which is a large structure of the 13th century. On the N. side of the city is a strong citadel; and without the walls are some magnificent ruins of a religious edifice, and an enormous mound raised by Nadir Shah. The chief's residence is a mean building, and the filth of the town is extreme; but the vicinity is very beautiful, and irrigated by numerous canals, and highly productive, and Herat has been usually one of the most flourishing places in the East, as a grand central mart for the products of India, China, Tartary, Afghanistan, and Persia; and other manufs., of carpets, sheepskin, caps and cloaks, shoes, &c., are carried on. Most of its wealthy merchants are Hindoos. Herat was long the cap. of the extensive empire ruled by the descendants of Timour. Its territory now extends N. to the Moorghaub mtns., and E. nearly to Candahar; and it is still a post of great military as well as commercial importance.

Area, comprising 6 par., 2,320 ac. Inhab. ho., 2,138. Pop. 10,921. It lies in a richly cultivated & beautiful valley. Streets generally broad; houses well-built, though in great part anc. Principal building, the cathedral, built in the early Norman style, in 1072; length, 325 feet; height of central tower, 160 feet. It contains many fine monuments, and attached to it is a chapter-house, ladye-chapel, valuable library, cloisters, &c., but its general beauty is much impaired by the incongruous W. front, rebuilt in 1786. A triennial musical festival is held here. The episcopal palace is anc., and surrounded by large gardens; the college is a venerable pile, forming a quadrangle. The grammar-school, partly supported by the dean and chapter, has 20 exhibitions to the university, but it is not in much repute. Amongst the charities, for the number of which Hereford is famous, are 11 ancient hospitals, or alms-houses, yielding together about 1,500*l.* per ann. Total charities, 2,060*l.*, besides 4,360 loaves distributed by the dean and chapter. The other public structures are the handsome co. hall, the co. jail, & ho. of correction, ancient town-hall, city jail, theatre, of which the Kemble family long had the management; a handsome R. Cath. chapel, a large infirmary, supported by voluntary contributions, a lunatic hospital, union work-house, mkt.-house, bank, and Nelson monument; ruins of a monast. of Black friars, & some remains of the castle and city walls. Hereford has small manufs. of gloves, hats, flannels, and cutlery; an increasing trade in cider, hops, corn, wool, bark, and timber, which will be much facilitated by the Hereford and Gloucester canal, the navigation of the river being dependant on season, &c. Coals are obtained chiefly from Abergavenny by railw.; and several railways, to connect the city with Shrewsbury, Worcester, Gloucester, and Monmouth, are projected, or in progress. Markets well supplied with fish, on Wed. & Sat. The October fair is the largest in Engl. for cattle and cheese. Races in August. Corp. rev., 3,464*l.* The city is a polling-place, and the chief place of election for the co.; it has sent 2 members to the H. of C. since 23d Edward 1. Reg. elects. (1848) 1,002. The diocese is one of the most anc. in Engl., being of British origo, and re-established by the Saxons in 680. It comprises the 2 archdeaneries of Hereford and Salop, including 13 deaneries, which partly extend into the cos. of Monmouth, Radnor, Montgomery, and Worcester. Among the celebrated bishops of this see were—Thomas Cantilupe, who died in 1285, and was canonised, Fox, the Reformer, Godwin, and Dr Headley. Hereford suffered much from the Welsh, during the Saxon era, from the Barons' wars, under the Plantagenets, and from those of the 17th century, when it warmly espoused the side of the king, and was one of the last places which held out against the parliament. During the middle ages it gave title of Earl to the great house of Bohun, and now gives that of Viscount to the Devereux family. The city is celebrated in historic records as having been the birth-place of Nell Gwynn and David Garrick, and the school in which the genius of Clive, Sidons, and Kemble, was fostered and developed.

Princip. hills, the Hatterel range of the Black mtns. in the S.W., and the Malvern on the E. Chief rivs., the Wye, Lngg, Arrow, Frome, and Munnow. Soil in most parts, a deep heavy red loam, mixed with marl and chalk, and unusually fertile. Climate remarkably healthy—diseases of the respiratory organs are placed second in the list of mortality, but instances of longevity are more numerous than in any other part of England, except the N. Riding of the co. of York. Chief agric. produce, wheat & barley, apples, pears, and hops, all of superior quality. The apple crop is the largest in England, estimated to yield not less than 20,000 hhds. of cider, mostly of superior quality. About 13,000 ac. are devoted to hops. Oak bark is also an important production. The cattle are generally preferred for feeding to any other English breed, but are not good milkers. Nearly half the field labour of the co. is performed by them. The breed of sheep (estimated at about 500,000), is almost as celebrated as that of the cattle. Agriculture pretty well advanced, but there is still a great want of drainage. Estates of all sizes; farms mostly large, and held at will. Average rent of land (1810), 16s. 5d. per acre. Value of land (1843), 629,981*l.* Rent of houses, 128,572*l.* Total annual value of real property, 805,319*l.* There are small manufs. of gloves, and coarse woollens. HESSEN CASSEL, or ELECTORAL HESSEN (Germ. Kurhessen), a state of Germany, comprised between lat. 49° 56' and 52° 26' N., and lon. 8° 25' and 10° 8' E., cap. Cassel. It is composed of six isolated portions, the largest of which, comprising Hesse proper, & including the cap., is bounded E. by Saxe-Weimar and Bavaria, S. by Frankfurt and Hesse-Darmstadt, W. by Nassau, Hesse, and Waldeck, N. by Prussia and Hanover. The two principal detached portions are Schmalkalden and Schaumburg, and the smaller Barchfeld, Dorheim, and Katzenberg. Area 4,439 sq. m. Pop. (1843) 732,073. Pop. in 1846, 754,590. Surface elevated and mntnous: the Meissner S.E. of Almerode, 2,325 ft. in elevation, is the highest point of H. proper, and the Inselberg, one of the summits of the Thuringer-Wald, on the frontier of Schmalkalden, is the culm. point of the state. The territory is situated in the basin of the N. Sea, and is drained by the Weser and the Rhine. The chief rivers are (1st), the Weser, with its two upper branches, the Werra and the Fulda; (2d), the Main & the Lahn, affs. of the Rhine. Among the others are the Diemel, the Edder, with the Schwalm, and the Haune, affs. of the Fulda; the Ohm, aff. of the Lahn; the Nidda & the Kinzig, affs. of the Main. Climate generally cold, except in the valley of the Main. Mean temp. at Fulda, year, 46°; winter, 27°.5; summer, 65°.6. Soil is generally infertile, except in the valleys of the principal rivers. Schmalkalden is almost entirely unproductive. Corn is raised sufficient for consumption. Chief crops rye, barley, oats, wheat, maize. Potatoes are an important crop. Fruit of all kinds is abundant in the prov. Hanau, where apples are extensively used in making cider. The vine is cultivated in the prov. Hanau; it ripens also in the valley of the Werra, near Witzenhansen, the N. most point of its cultivation in Germany. Lint is an important object of culture. Hemp is grown only in small quantities in Hanau. The cultivation of hops, formerly important, is now nearly abandoned, & tobacco is now raised only in the valley of the Werra. Forests occupy one-third of the territory. The principal timber is oak, elm, and beech. Cattle rearing is the most important branch of rural industry. Agriculture is in a very backward state. Hesse Cassel possesses in abundance many of the most useful minerals, the chief are iron, coal, salt; gold in small quantities is found in the sands of the Edder; silver mines, once worked, are long since abandoned, and only one copper mine is in operation. In Schmalkalden, there are seven high furnaces producing iron of excellent quality; in the rest of the state, there are other five high furnaces. The chief coal mines are in the prov. of Lower Hesse. Turf is abundant, and is mostly used for fuel. It has numerous mineral springs, and the sulphur baths of Neundorf are among the best frequented in N. Germany. Manufs. have been greatly extended since the state joined the German customs union. The most important are linen fabrics, called Osnaburgs, and next to these flannels, and the fine carpets of Hanau; the weaving of cotton has recently replaced that of linen in the environs of Fulda. Silks and velvets are manuf. at Hanau. The circle of Schmalkalden is the great centre of the manuf. of iron & steel goods of every description, and its products have long been the most celebrated in Germany. The other manufs. comprise paper, wooden wares, pianos, chemical products, tobacco, and beet-root sugar. The pottery of Gross Almerode is among the most esteemed in Europe. Hanau is celebrated for its jewellery. Chief exports, linens, carpets, jewellery, iron and steel goods. Imports colonial goods, cotton, silk, wine, brandy, &c. The chief branch of commerce is in the transit of goods, which is facilitated by the navigable rivers Main, Weser, Werra, and Fulda, and excellent roads and railways, are in progress. In 1832, H. Cassel and H. Darmstadt united with Prussia to form the origin of the German customs union. The chief educational establishments are the university at Marburg, the military and polytechnic school at Cassel, and the theological seminary at Fulda. Numerous elementary schools have recently been established, and the state is not now behind the neighbouring countries in respect of education. H. Cassel is a constitutional monarchy, the title of the sovereign is Prince Elector of Hesse. The state is divided into the provs Lower Hesse, with Schaumburg, Upper Hesse, Fulda, and Hanau. Army 7,064 men, of whom 947 are cavalry. Public revenue (1847) 12,942,460 thalers.

HESSEN DARMSTADT (Gn. DUCHY OF), a state of Germany, situated between lat. 49° 22' and 51° 4' N., and lon. 7° 50' & 9° 30' E., cap. Darmstadt. It consists of two principal portions in N. and S., separated by portions of H. Cassel, Nassau, and Frankfurt, bounded E. by H. Cassel, Bavaria and Baden, S. by Baden and Bavaria, W. by Prussia and Nassau, N. by H. Cassel and part of Prussia; and nine small districts included in the neighbouring states. Area 3,761 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 852,679. Surface elevated and mntnous. In the N., which is traversed on W. by the Taunus, and E. by the Vogelsgebirge, and in S. by the Odenwald. Highest point the Taufstein, 2,283 ft. The greater part of the territory is situated in the basin of the Rhine, the rest in that of the Weser. Chief rivers the Rhine (which traverses all the S. portion), and its affs. the Neckar, Main, Nidder, Nahe, and Lahn; the Schwalm and Fulda, affs. of the Weser. Climate cold, except in the valley of the Rhine. The country is essentially agricultural; more than half the territory is arable, the soil is about the most fertile and best cultivated in Germany. Chief crops, wheat in the lowlands, buck-wheat in the Odenwald, oats in Rhenish Hessen, millet in Starkenburg; potatoes, generally, best in the mntn. districts. The other products are flax, hemp, hops, tobacco, & fruit. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Hessen, which produces some of the finest growths on the Rhine. Forests belong chiefly to Upper Hessen & Starkenburg. Cattle rearing is an important branch in rural industry. Minerals comprise copper, iron, coal, and salt. Iron is mined chiefly in Upper Hessen and the Odenwald, salt at Wimpfen, coal at Dorheim. Spinning and weaving linen and hempen goods are the principal manufs., the others comprise silk, paper, chemical products, metals to a small extent. Chief commerce, exports of agricultural produce; and imports, of colonial & manuf. goods. The principal entrepot is Mayence. The duchy is traversed, from N. to S., by the Frankfort and Mannheim railway. Public instruction has made rapid progress of late, especially in the province of Rhenish Hessen. The chief educational establishments are the university of Giessen, seven gymnasia, and numerous elementary schools. H. Darmstadt is a constitutional monarchy since 1820; the title of the sovereign is Grand Duke of Hessen. The duchy is divided into the provs. of Upper Hessen, Starkenburg, and Rhenish Hessen. HIMÁLAYA, or HIMMÁLEH MOUNTAINS, "the dwelling of snow," the Immaus of the ancients, extend along the N. boundary of Hindostan, and form the most elevated mountain-chain in the world. They are situated between lat. 27° & 35° N., and lon. 73° and 98° E. The Hindoo Coosh range is continuous with the Himalaya mountains on the W., & on the E. they extend into Assam. The length of the range is estimated at 1,500 m.; the breadth, as far as ascertained, varies from 100 m. to 350 m. The range lies between two plains, a low alluvial plain on the S., drained by the Ganges and the Brahmaputra, and the elevated table-land of Tibet on the N. and N.E. The mountains terminate on the S., towards the plain of the Ganges, in a wall-like range, from 4,000 to 5,000 feet high, broken up, at intervals, by deep precipitous chasms, through which the springs and rivers, formed from the melted snows in the interior, flow down with great impetuosity. Between these and the higher ranges lie the fertile and well-cultivated valleys of Nepal, Bhotan, and Assam. To the N., the enormous masses are separated from one another by the valleys of Cashmere, the Indus, and the Suteje. The mean elevation of the range has been estimated at from 16,000 to 20,000 feet. Forty of the peaks have an elevation exceeding 20,000 feet. Several reach a height of 25,000 feet, and Dwalagiri is about 28,000 feet, Kunchinging 28,178 feet, Juhahir 25,670 feet, Jumnauri 25,500 feet, and Chamalari 23,929 feet. The high table-land of Tibet, forming the N. portion of the range, has a more gradual and extensive slope than the steep and abrupt mountain declivities of the S. The Himalaya maintains a considerable height and breadth along the N. of Assam, but beyond this point nothing certain is known of the range. The passes, of which there are several across the Himalaya, are at high elevations. Karakorum pass is 18,600 feet, Parangla 18,500 feet, Dora Ghaut 17,750 feet, Niti Ghaut 16,814 feet. The difficulty of these ascents is extreme, especially that of the Niti Pass, which leads to Mansa, the sacred lake of Tibet. The base and summits, and probably the great mass of this range, consists of granite and crystalline-stratified rocks. A zone of silurian strata prevails at elevations of 15,000 to 18,000 feet, and tertiary strata, some of very modern date, with many organic remains, occur at various elevations along the ridge. The lower limits of the snow line is on the southern side, at an elevation of 12,981 feet, while on the northern it is 16,620 feet. Vegetation also extends much higher on the N. than on the S. side. This arises from the serenity and dryness of the air, and the radiated heat from the extensive sloping table-land towards the N., while on its S. there are more frequent gales and moisture, and an abrupt precipitous termination of the mountains. Some of the peaks in the interior are free of snow, and the contrast of this, with the other snow-covered summits, and the deep azure of the sky, renders the scenery most magnificent. The base of the mountains to the S. is covered with a dense, impenetrable jungle, separating them from the plains of India. This belt diminishes to the W. and N. of the Jumna. Cultivation is carried to the foot of the mountains. At the level of the base the vegetation is of a tropical character; at an elevation of 5,000 feet, European plants succeed. Here rice, and other grains, are cultivated; as also a species of arum, the roots of which form the food of the Hill-people, and wheat grows at an elevation of 13,000 feet. The cultivation of the tea plant has been introduced successfully in the Kumaon and Gurhwal districts. Herds of cattle are numerous, and especially sheep and goats. Mines of iron, lead, and copper exist, but have been little wrought or explored.

In the vicinity, which is fertile and beautiful, are the modern ruins of Fonthill abbey, and some vestiges of a British town.

HINDOO COOSH, or KOOSH, INDIAN CAUCASUS, a great mtn. chain of Central Asia, between lat.  $34^{\circ}$  and  $36^{\circ}$  N., and lon.  $68^{\circ}$  and  $75^{\circ}$  E., extending from the Upper Indus E.ward, to the Bamian pass W.ward, separating Afghanistan from Indep. Turkestan, and connected E. with the Himalaya, W. with the Huzareh mountains, and N. with the table-land of Pamere. It rises in many parts to upwards of 20,000 feet in elevation, but has, especially, one vast summit, the Hindoo Koh, in lat.  $35^{\circ} 40' N.$ , lon.  $68^{\circ} 50' E.$ , 80 m. N. Cabool, more lofty than the rest, though no actual measurement of it has been made. This chain is generally barren, and remarkably destitute of timber; in most other respects it resembles the Himalaya (which see). In it the Oxus and Helmund rivers have their sources.

HINDOON, or HINDONE, a town of Hindostan, dom. and 74 m. E.S.E. Jeypoor, well built, mostly of red sandstone, & having some Hindoo temples, constructed in a Mohammedan style.

HINDOSTAN, that part of India generally known as the peninsula within the Ganges, extending from the Himalaya mountains on the N., to Cape Comorin on the S., and bounded on the E. and W. by the Indian Ocean. Length from N. to S. 1,800 m.; greatest breadth, between Cape Monze and Sylhet, along the parallel of  $25^{\circ}$  N., is 1,580 m. Area 1 million sq. m., or about 9 times the area of Great Britain and Ireland. Coast line about 3,280 m. There are very few harbours on the E. coast, but on the W. they are numerous & safe. The mountain ranges are the Himalaya on the N., the Vindhya in the valley of the Ganges, and the E. and W. Ghants of the S. Peninsula (all which are noticed under their respective names). The principal rivers, on the N. and E. are the Ganges and Brahmaputra, with their numerous tributaries, originating in the Himalaya, & flowing into the Bay of Bengal; the Godavery, Kistnah, Penaar, and Canvery also discharge their waters into the Bay of Bengal. On the W. side, the Indus, with its tributaries, flows S. from the Himalaya, and discharges its waters into the Indian Ocean. The Nerbudda and Taptee, are the only other rivers of any magnitude that flow from the interior W.ward. The riv. courses indicate that the elevated portions of this great peninsula, are towards the N. and W., and that the surface has a continuous declination to the E. and S.E. coasts. There are no lakes of any magnitude. The country is naturally divided into the plain of the Ganges and the plain of the Indus, or northern region; the Deccan, or middle region, which extends S. from the Nerbudda river; and the S. region, comprehending the apex of the peninsula S. of the gap of Coimbatour. A considerable portion of Hindostan, as far as ascertained, consists of the primary granitic formation; while igneous rocks of a later date intersect the centre of the peninsula. Coal is found in several localities, in Bengal, on the Damoda river, at Burdwan, Palamow, in the dist. of Cutch, and on the Indus and Suteje. A band of lignite traverses the region of the Himalaya. Tertiary formations prevail on the eastern shores of the peninsula, from the Godavery to the Mahanudee river; and extensive alluvial formations exist in the valleys of the Ganges, Indus, &c. Few metallic mines of any importance are wrought. Diamonds are found in the Deccan, and carnelions in the W. parts of the peninsula. Among the native animals, the elephant, lion, tiger, leopard, buffalo, and goat are the most remarkable. The climate of Hindostan is tropical and subtropical. In the S. and middle regions the heat is very great; in the N., the elevated regions of the Himalaya have a temperate and delightful climate. The monsoons prevailing on both sides of the peninsula, bring periodic rains. Many portions of the valleys of the Ganges and Indus are very fertile, producing the cereal grains and pulses, sugar, indigo, cotton, opium, ginger and other spices. Teak and various other timber trees flourish in the Ghants. In the southern regions, the country is in a more uncultivated state, & more densely covered with forests, but interspersed with many fertile cultivated plains. The name of Hindoo was applied by the Persians to the people inhabiting the country between the Himalaya mountains and Vindhya range; they belong to the Indo-European branch of the human race, & speak dialects of the Sanscrit language; but the peninsula of India was peopled by other aboriginal races, having more of the Negro character than the modern Hindoos. To these are ascribed the most ancient monuments and temple-caves, and traces of their tribes still exist; the most numerous are the Gonds, who occupy the mountain region from Caucasus N.W. to the sources of the Taptee and Whurda rivers; the Bheels, who occupy the N. Ghants and the Vindhya mountains, and the Coolies, who possess a tract of the western Ghants. These are of a darker hue, and in a lower state of civilization than the Hindoos. Besides these, there are about 10 millions of Arabs and Persians in Hindostan, from 1 to 2 millions of descendants of Portuguese settlers, and about 60,000 Europeans, chiefly British. The Hindoo pop. is divided into 4 classes or castes, of which, there are Brahmans, Kshatriyas or military, Vaisyas or agriculturists and herdsmen, and Sudras or artisans. Throughout most part of India a peculiar village system is established. The villages are so many little republics, each providing for its own wants, and independent, in general, of any relations with other villages, having its own schoolmaster, accountant, washerman, barber, blacksmith, and electing its own potail or head-man, who assesses the villagers for the land tax. The village being taxed with a certain sum, should any of the inhabitants fail in ability to pay their portion, the rest make up the sum wanting; under this system the land revenue is collected, not only in the native governments, where it composes more than 9-10ths of the total revenue, but also throughout most part of the presids. of Bombay and Agra. In Malabar, Travancore, &c., a singular practice is in force, by which property descends in the female, and not in the male line. Their theology is contained in the ancient books of the Vedas, which inculcate the worship of their deities, Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva; the transmigrating of souls, and their final absorption into the deity. Buddhism had also its origin in Hindostan, and Mohammedanism now extensively prevails. Philosophy, science, and the arts were cultivated from an early period by the Hindoos, especially the domestic arts of weaving, dyeing, & working in metals and gems. They have never greatly excelled in music or painting; but in architecture, they have arrived at considerable eminence. From the earliest records of history, the nations of the western world derived their merchandise from India. The country was entered and partly subdued by Alexander the Great. About 126 a.c., it was also invaded by the Tartars, or Scythians of the Greeks, & Sakas of the Hindoos. From the 10th to the 12th centuries of the christian era, the Mohammedans overran and conquered considerable portions of Hindostan; & subsequently the Mogul empire was established. In 1498, the Portuguese were the first European nation who invaded and established themselves in India at Goa, and along the Malabar coast; and in the beginning of the 17th century, the Dutch and English commenced their settlements. HULCOTT, a pa. of England, co. Bucks, 3 m. N.E. Aylesbury. Area 850 ac. Pop. 133.

HULL (KINGSTON ON), a parl. and munic. bor., river port, town, co. of itself, Engl., in co. York, E. Riding, on the N. side of the Humber, at the influx of the Hull, 22 m. N.W. the Spurn-Head, 36 m. S.E. York. Lat. of citadel 53° 44' 6" N., lon. 0° 20' W. Area of town and old munic. bor. 960 ac. Pop. 41,629; and of co. of town, which extends for some distance W. ward along the Humber, 11,600 ac. Pop. 45,173. Pop., in 1841, of new munic. and parl. bor., which comprises the town, the pas. Sulcoates and Sudcoates, a part of Sutton, and some extra-parochial places, 65,670. The old town of Hull, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. in length, N. to S., by half as much in breadth, stands on the W. side of the river Hull, at its entrance into the Humber, and is enclosed from N. to W. by three noble docks, crossed by moveable bridges. Beyond these are Myton on the W., Sulcoates on the N., both containing populous quarters of the modern town; and beyond the Hull, on the E., are Sutton and Drypool, with a large citadel occupying the E. angle, formed by the Hull and Humber. The town has a respectable, but not a striking appearance; it is generally well built, & pretty well drained. A good line of streets runs from the Humber N. ward through the middle of the old town, having in its centre the market-place, in which are the fine church of Holy Trinity, a good market-house, and a gilt equestrian statue of William III. This line is crossed by several others leading to still broader thoroughfares beyond the docks, all which present good shops, and commonly a very busy scene of traffic. In Sulcoates are many broad and handsome streets of private residences, and others on the W. part of the town; but this latter quarter also contains some long thoroughfares of an inferior order, and the E. and N.E. suburbs are mostly composed of streets of the same class. Extensive warehouses, backed by narrow lanes, border the muddy river Hull, along which the town & suburbs Trippet & Sulcoates, extend for nearly 2 m. from the Humber. The docks, constructed successively since 1775, on the site previously occupied by fortifications, have an aggregate length of 1,087 yards, breadth varying from 250 to 400 feet, and a total area of 24 acres, besides a basin between two of the piers on the Humber; they are surrounded by broad quays and large warehouses, have a depth varying at high tides from about 20 to 27 feet, and are crowded with shipping of all nations. At the head of one of them is a fine column with a colossal statue of Wilberforce. Holy Trinity church is a cruciform building, 272 feet in length, and one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture in England, with a pinnacled tower 140 feet in height, rich internal decorations and numerous monuments. There are about 10 other churches, two of which are quite new, many dissenting chapels, a synagogue, & a floating chapel for mariners. Amongst the most conspicuous public buildings are the custom-house, exchange, pilot, dock, excise, and stamp offices, the infirmary, two theatres, concert-hall, colleges, work-house, jail, mansion-house, new baths and wash-houses, terminus of the Hull and Selby railway, and a magnificent hotel adjoining it. The Trinity guild, founded in 1369, for decayed seamen and their widows, has an elegant edifice in the Tuscan order, containing a council-room with good portraits, a museum, a school for boys destined for the merchant service, and dwellings for pensioners; in 1833 its annual revenue was 13,302*l*. Hull has numerous hospitals and other charities, a charter-house founded by the De la Poles in 1380; Hull and Kingston colleges, which give instruction similar to King's & University colleges, London, and have two elegant buildings in the N.W. suburb; a medical school, a grammar school founded in 1486, having two exhibitions to Cambridge, the Vicar's and Cogan's schools, the latter with a revenue of 400*l*. a-year, a great number of charitable schools, refuges for the insane and the destitute, a dispensary, penitentiary, and lying-in-charity. A public subscription library possesses 25,000 vols., and here are a mechanics' institute, lyceum, and atheneum, all having libraries, a sailors' institute, a savings' bank, and masonic lodges. Outside of the N.W. suburb is a zoological garden. Hull is connected by railways with Scarborough, Whitby, York, and all the manufacturing towns of the W. Riding, for the export of manufs. of which it is the great outlet; and it has been lately put in more ready communication with London and the centre of England, by a continuation of the E. counties railway to New Holland on the opposite bank of the Humber, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  m. distant. The Trent, Ouse, Don, &c., tributaries of the Humber, and navigable canals, connect it also with a large inland territory. Principal exports are cotton and woollen stuffs, & yarn, earthenwares, hardwares, metals, rapeseed, and corn, the latter chiefly imported previously, with wool, bones, timber, hemp, flax, madder, skins, and other produce from Germany, Denmark, and the Baltic; with which, and with N. Amer., its foreign trade is the most active. Its coasting trade is highly important, and it receives large quantities of coal. Its merchants were the first in England who embarked in the northern whale fishery, but its fisheries have greatly declined. It communicates by steam-packets with London, Yarmouth, Leith, Berwick, Aberdeen, Hamburg, Rotterdam, and Copenhagen, many times weekly, and also continually with Selby, Goole, Gainsborough, York, and Grimsby. In 1845, 1,151 British ships, aggregate burden 269,071 tons, and 1,015 foreign vessels, burden 129,744 tons,—total 2,166 ships, burden 398,815 tons, entered the port; and in the same year, the total value of British and Irish produce exported from Hull amounted to 10,798,338*l*, or upwards of 1-6th of the total exports from the kingdom. Customs revenue (1846) 460,202*l*. Hull has not been renowned as a manufacturing town, but of late years a joint-stock company has been established which possesses three large cotton and flax mills, employing in all 3,000 hands, and producing 100,000 yards of cotton cloth weekly. Ship-building, and its auxiliary manufs., are extensively carried on, and here are foundries, tanneries, potteries, some large breweries, sugar refineries, soap and gas works, and various corn and oil mills, many in the E. suburbs impelled by wind, and which gives a Dutch appearance to the scenery along the Humber. The town has a branch of the Bank of England, many other banks, and several weekly newspapers. Markets, Tuesday and Friday, and on Saturday for retail and supply. Wool markets on Tuesdays, during all July, and two last weeks in June, and first in August. Fairs July 10, Oct. 10, and Dec. 10, the two former of 6 days each. The bor. is divided into 6 wards, and governed by a mayor, 13 aldermen, and 42 councillors. It has quarter sessions, and a court of requests. Corp. rev. (1847) 24,833*l*. Hull returns 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elec. (1848) 5,063. This town, under the name of Myton-wyk, appears to have been of importance in the time of Athelstan; but its consequence as a port dates from the time of Edward I., who conferred on it the royal designation, Kingston. In the civil war of Charles I., it was the first town to close its gates against the king, and it successfully sustained two sieges of the royal troops, in 1642 & 1643.—II. (Bishop's), a township, co. Chester, pa. Great Budworth, 8 miles N.N.W. Northwich. Pop. 1,753.—III. (Bishop's), a pa., co. Somerset,  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. W. Taunton. Area 1,670 ac. Pop. 1,263.—The Hull River, England, co. York, E. Riding, rises near Great Driffell, flows S., passing near Beverley, with which it communicates by a short canal, and after a total course of 30 m., enters the Humber on the E. side of Kingston-upon-Hull, of which it forms the harbour, which is lined with warehouses, for about 1 m. from the Humber. It separates the district Holderness on the E. from the Yorkshire Wolds on the W.

HULLINGTON, a pa. of England, co. Wilts,  $\frac{4}{3}$  m. S.S.W. Malmesbury. Area 3,200 ac. Pop. 634.

HUMBER, an estuary of the E. coast of Engl., between Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, formed by the junction of the Ouse and Trent rivers, 8 m. E. Goole, whence it proceeds for about 18 m. Eward, and then for about 22 m. S.E. to its junction with the N. Sea, below the Spurn-head, at its mouth, in lat. 53° 38' N., lon. 0° 10' E. Average breadth between 2 and 3 m., but near its mouth it widens to 6 or 7 m. It receives from the N. the Foulness and Hull, and from the S. the Ancholme and Ludd rivers. It is navigable to Hull for the largest vessels, and for vessels of considerable burden in all the rest of its extent, and it is connected by canals with all the other principal rivers of England. Its tributaries drain nearly the whole of Yorkshire, Notts, Leicestershire, and with parts of Lincolnshire; in all, an extent of about 10,000 sq. miles, or nearly 1-5th of England. Kingston-upon-Hull is on its N. or Yorkshire side; on its S. or Lincoln side are Barton, New Holland, and Great Grimsby.—II. a river of Newfoundland, enters the Gulf of St Lawrence, through the Bay of Islands, after a S. course of 150 miles.

The Carpathians form a natural boundary on the N. of Hungary, and their ramifications render this part of the country a mntnous region. They have different names in the 33 counties which they traverse. The most important for their metals are the mountains of Barsch, Honth, Sohl, Liptau, G6m6r, and Zips. In the E. the Carpathians of Transylvania traverse the counties of Szathmar, Bihar, Arad, Krasso, and Temes. In the W., beyond the Danube, the country is traversed by contreforts of the Alps of Styria, to which belong the Bakony-wald and the Vertes mountains. The countries of Croatia and the Littorale, in the S.W. are crossed by branches of the Dinaric Alps. These different mountains enclose two great plains, the smaller of which, about 4,200 sq. m. in extent, is in the W., between the offsets of the Alps and Carpathians, and the other in the E., with an area of about 21,000 sq. m., traversed by the Danube and the Theiss, and has an elevation of from 300 to 400 feet above the level of the sea. This region is so flat that the rivers have a very sluggish course, and a great part of the surface is covered with marshes and sand downs. The rivers of Hungary belong to the basins of the Danube and the Theiss, and have generally a S. course, only one, the Poprad, having a N. direction. Principal riv. the Danube, which enters Hungary on the W. at Presburg, flows generally E. 270 m. to Waitzen, then S. 180 m. to Vukovar, and again E. 190 m. to Orsova, where it enters Wallachia. Its principal affils. in Hungary are, on right the Leythe, Raab, Csaba, Sarvitz, Drave, Save, and Temes; left the March (on W. border), Waag, Neutra, Gran, and the Theiss, which has a S. course of nearly 400 m., and numerous large tributaries.

The principal lakes are the Platten See (or Lake Balaton), Neusiedler See, & Lake Palitz,—the most extensive marsh in the Hansag, between the counties Wieselburg and Oedenburg, which has an area of 126 sq. m.; the whole extent a marsh is reckoned at 1,932 sq. m. The largest canals are the Franzens canal, between the Danube and the Theiss and the Bega canal, in the Banat, which also joins the Danube. The climate varies exceedingly: in the mntnous districts it is cold and severe, while in the S. it is so genial that the vine, chestnut, fig, and other southern fruits are grown. It is in general healthy, except in the marshy districts. The chief mineral products are gold, silver, copper, cobalt, salt, alum, and coal. Gold is most abundant in Transylvania, & silver in Hungary. The gold washings of several of the rivers are important. Copper is abundant, yearly average about 34,452 centners; and iron, widely distributed, yields an average of 269,997 centners. Lead, on an average of 5 years, yields only 4,178 centners. In 1845 the amount was only 33,076 tons. Opals are found in the county Saros. Coal and turf both occur, the latter is most widely distributed. Coal is but little worked. Mineral springs are numerous, and many of them celebrated for their medicinal qualities. Hungary is generally fertile in grain, which is exported to a considerable extent. Chief crops, rye, barley, oats, maize, millet, buck-wheat, & rice. The level regions of the cos. Bacs and Temesvar possess the richest soil, and have been called the granary of Hungary. The mtns. are covered with dense forests. The cultivation of the vine is carried to great perfection. Next to France, Hungary produces the greatest quantity of wine of any country in Europe, & the quality of several of its vintages, especially that of Tokay, is unrivalled. Tobacco is an important product, the annual amount averaging 400,000 centners, great part of which is exported. Domestic animals comprise horses, horned cattle, buffalos, sheep and swine. In 1845, the number of horses was reckoned at 1,200,000. In the N.W. counties they are of middle size, in the S. & E. they are smaller and more active. The rich pastures of Hungary produce some of the finest cattle in Europe. Great improvements have recently been made in the breed of sheep, the number of which in 1838, was reckoned at 18,000,000. Swine are reared in the forests in vast herds, the number in 1838 was supposed to be upwards of 8,000,000. Wild and domestic fowls are abundant. Bees are extensively reared, and in 1827, 18,730 cwt. of honey, and 2,289 cwt. wax were exported. Fish are abundant in the rivers and lakes, and the Theiss is reckoned the richest in fish of any river in Europe. The chief occupations of the pop. are agriculture, cattle rearing, and mining. Manufs., which are unimportant, comprise woollens, linens, silks, paper (which is made by English machinery in the county Gömör), tobacco, & iron ware. There are 300 breweries. The best beer is made at Pesth. Placed between rich pastoral countries on the E., and manufacturing dists. on the W., Hungary is well situated for trade, its only sea coast, indeed, is a slip of 123 m. on the Adriatic, at its S.W. extremity; but it has numerous large navigable rivs., including the Danube, with its affls. the Theiss, Drave, and Save. From 500 to 1,000 vessels trade on the Danube from Hungary to Vienna, exchanging grain, and other raw materials for merchandise. A new impulse was given to this trade by the introduction of steam-packets in 1830. The roads in many parts of the country are very bad, but railway communication has been established in the W. portion. [AUSTRIA.]

Hungary is peopled by numerous distinct races, speaking different languages, the chief are Hungarians or Magyars, Slavonians, Germans, and Wallachians. The Magyars are of Asiatic origin, many of them are Protestants, & the only people of E. Europe who hold liberty of conscience as a political canon. Their language has recently been snubstituted for Latin in official correspondence. The Slavonians are more numerous than the Magyars. Their different races include the Slovaks, Croats, Russniaks, Wendians, &c. The Wallachians have also their peculiar language. The Germans, who for 8 centuries have been spread over the country, have in many places lost their language and nationality. Besides these principal nations, there are many Greeks, Armenians, Jews, and Gipsies. The greatest number of the inhabitants are Roman Catholics, and next to these communicants of the Greek Church, Calvinists, Lutherans, and Jews. The proportions, for Hungary and Transylvania, being, according to Fenyés (1843):—Roman Catholics 6,130,188. Greek Catholics 1,322,344. Protestants, Augsburg Confession, 1,006,210. Do., Helvetian do., 1,846,844. Unitarians 47,280. Greek (not united) 2,283,505. Jews 244,035. The chief educational establishments are the university at Pesth, a lyceum at Erlau, 7 schools of philosophy, 55 gymnasia, 66 latin, & numerous parish schools. Education in general is in a very backward state, although the higher nobility are well educated, & generally familiar with foreign languages. The first inhabitants of Hungary mentioned in history, were the Pannonians. The Magyars conquered it in the 9th century. Their followers embraced Christianity. The last duke, Stephen, took the title of king in the year 1000, and added Transylvania to his dominions. The first prince of the house of Hapsburg who reigned in Hungary, was Ferdinand I., who was elected by the diet in 1526; the succession was fixed in the Imperial house in 1687. Since the termination of the civil wars in 1711, the house of Austria has held possession of the country; but as the union on the part of Hungary was voluntary, it was never in reality a dependency of Austria. The two countries were united by having a common sovereign, but the power of the king was controlled by the Hungarian diet, and recent disputts have led to a complete change of relations between the two countries. On 30th May 1848, the diet of Klausenburg decreed the union of Transylvania with Hungary, and by Imperial manifesto, of 10th June 1848, the military frontier was also annexed to the country. At a diet held at Dehreczin, May 1849, Hungary, including Transylvania and Croatia, declared itself an independent republic, and forthwith proceeded to vindicate its rights by an appeal to arms. ICELAND, an isl. under Denmark, in the Atlantic Ocean, 700 m. W. Norway, and about 200 m. E. Greenland, between lat. 63° 24' and 66° 33' N. and lon. 13° 30' and 24° 30' W. Area, with adjacent isles, estimated at 37,800 sq. m. Pop (1840) 57,100. Surface mntnous; soil volcanic traversed from E. to W. by separate mntn masses, the ramifications of which form on the N.E. and W. coasts numerous fords or bays which extend far into the interior. The highest mntns. are Oräfajöklet (lat. 64° N.), 6,405 feet; Snäfell (lat. 64° 48'), 5,968 feet; Hecla, 5,110 feet. The central portion is uninhabited and little known. There are many large streams which flow generally with great rapidity. Glaciers cover a surface of upwards of 4,000 sq. m.; they exist in all the mntns. above 4,000 ft. in elevation and extend down to the sea. In the N., where the hills are generally low, there are few glaciers. The greatest mass of ice is in the S.E. of the isl., and this region has for centuries been the scene of the most violent volcanic eruptions. There are 30 known volcanoes in Iceland, 8 of which have been active within a century. The most destructive volcanic eruptions on record were those of 1294, 1341, 1636, 1693, 1783, and the eruption of Hecla, 2d September 1845, to 6th April 1846, on which occasion the ashes reached the Orkney Islands. The isl. also contains numerous small mud volcanoes and intermittent thermal springs, in the chief of which, the Great Geyser, the water, at a depth of 72 feet, is 30° above the boiling point. The climate is very variable; storms of extreme violence are frequent; summer moist; in winter the sky is dark and gloomy, but lighted up by brilliant displays of the aurora borealis. Temperature more elevated than in any other country in the same latitude, mean of year at Reikiavik 40° Fahr.; the S. coasts, washed by a prolongation of the gulf stream, are much milder than the N., and generally free from ice. Forests formerly abounded, but the isl. is now destitute of trees, except a few stunted birches; the want of fuel is severely felt, although the gulf stream and the polar currents occasionally float drift-wood to its shores, and a fine white turf is used. No grain of any kind can be raised; but cabbage and potatoes are cultivated. The flora of Iceland is nearly allied to that of Scandinavia, comprising mosses & a few shrubs. The most important domestic animal is the sheep, which, with the horse, ox, pig, and dog, were introduced from Norway during last century; rein deer, introduced in 1770, now exist in large herds, but are not domesticated; the polar bear is sometimes cast on the shores from the northern ice fields. Fish are very abundant on all the coasts, and form the chief support of the inhabitants. Birds are very numerous, the most valuable of which is the eider-duck. No reptiles of any kind exist in the island. There are no manufs.; and the only commerce consists in the exchange of wool, butter, skins, fish, and oil, for European manufs. The island is divided into 3 amts. or counties, viz., Süderamt, Westeramnt, and Norder and Osteramt, & these are subdivided into 19 syssel. The island was discovered by the Northmen in the 9th century, and came into the possession of Denmark in 1380. The Icelanders belong to the Scandinavian race; they are attached to their country, and hospitable to strangers; their religion is Lutheran; there are few schools, but domestic education is general, and the people are intelligent. Their affairs are regulated by a council called Althing, composed of 1 representative for Reikiavik, & 1 for each of the 19 syssel; their first meeting was held on 1st July 1845. The only town is Reikiavik. Pop. 900. There are upwards of 20 trading vill., mostly on the coasts.

Dutch established settlements on the peninsula, but the former never acquired more than a paltry territory on the W. coast, & the latter a few commercial factories. The French influence in India, at one time considerable, also yielded to the superior enterprise of the Brit., & finally the French relinquished the field. In 1625, the first English settlement was made, by a company of merchants, in a small spot of the Coromandel coast, of 5 sq. m., transferred in 1653 to Madras. A short time previous a settlement had also been obtained at Hooghly, which afterwards became the Calcutta station. In 1687, Bombay was erected into a presidency. In 1773, by an act of the British Legislature, the 3 provinces were placed under the administration of a governor-general, and Calcutta was made the seat of a supreme court of judicature, the presidencies of Madras and Bombay being made subordinate to that of Bengal. Hitherto the affairs of India had been managed by the company, but in 1784 a board of control was appointed by Government, the president of which became secretary of state for India. From the year 1750, when the warlike acquisition of territory commenced under Lord Clive, a succession of conquests, almost forced upon the British contrary to their inclinations, have now placed nearly all India under their sway. The court of directors of the East India company have the power of electing the governor-general, subject to the approval of the government, and they have also the power of his recall. The company also hold the patronage of other appointments till the expiry of the act in 1854; but in 1833 their exclusive right to trade was abolished in favour of a free trade. The governor-general, assisted by a council of 5 members, has the power of making laws for the whole of British India, subject to the approval of the home government, and he has the sole direction of the army, which is under the command of a commander-in-chief. There is a free press and equal laws to all subjects. The revenue is derived almost entirely from a land tax. Under the zemindary system, established in Bengal, the zemindars, formerly a sort of collectors, have been constituted the actual proprietors of the soil, and have become bound to pay a fixed and permanent assessment, amounting to about one-half of the produce. In Madras, an assessment varying according to the productiveness of the soil, is adopted, under the name of the ryotwary system. The village system, prevalent in the native states, and in some parts of Bengal and the Nerbudda districts, consists in the assessment being collected from the cultivators of the soil through the medium of native village officers, appointed by each community without the direct interference of Government. These rent assessments are very high, and bear hard on the cultivators of the soil; yet the condition of the population under British rule, is greatly ameliorated from that under the unsteady governments, and the incessant wars and conquests, of previous periods of their history. The annual revenue of British India is about 15,000,000*l.*, and the total revenue of the whole of India does not probably exceed 20,000,000*l.* The army is composed of British troops under the pay of the company, and of native Sepoys, the infantry consists chiefly of Hindoos, the cavalry of Mohammedans; both of which corps, in addition to their native officers, have also a complement of British officers.

In 1428, India was first visited by Vasco de Gama, and subsequently the Portuguese and the

INDRE, a riv. of France, depts. Indre & Indre-et-Loire, joins the Loire, 18 m. W.S.W. Tours, after a N.W. course of 115 m. On it are the towns La Châtre, Châteauroux, Chatillon, and Loches, from which last it is navigable to the Loire, 45 m.

INDRE, a dep. of N.W. France, formed of part of the old prov. Berry, enclosed by the depts. Loire-et-Cher and Indre-et-Loire, Vienne, H. Vienne, Creuse, Cher. Area 2,749 sq. miles. Pop. (1846) 263,977. Surface uniformly level. Principal rivers, the Indre and Creuse. More corn and wine are raised than required for home consumption: though much of the soil is barren and swampy. Climate generally mild and temperate. Sheep are numerous, and many oxen and poultry are fattened here for the Paris mkt. This dep. furnishes the best lithographic stones in France, gun-flints, iron & iron goods, earthenwares, & cutlery at Châteauroux. Woollen and cotton, cloths, and yarn, leather, tiles, and parchment, are among the chief products, and are exported to double the value of the imports. Indre is divided into the 4 arronds., Châteauroux, Issoudun, La Châtre, and Le Blanc.

INDRE-ET-LOIRE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, formed chiefly of the old prov. of Touraine, comprising a region on both sides of the Loire, enclosed by the depts. Sarthe, Maine-et-Loire, Vienne, Indre, & Loire-et-Cher. Area 2,400 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 312,400. Climate mild. Surface level, and near the Loire very fertile, elsewhere poor, and often marshy. The Cher, Indre, and Vienne rivers water its S. portion. Agriculture has latterly improved, and the produce in corn is now more than adequate to home consumption. The quantity of wine is double that annually consumed, and the surplus is mostly sent to Paris and into Belgium. The dep. furnishes excellent lithographic stones, pipe and potters' clay, and contains an immense mound of petrified shells, which are used as manure. Hemp, liquorice, anniseed, truffles, fruits, &c., are raised in considerable quantities, the produce of the dep. being chiefly agricultural. The culture of silk is increasing, as are the silk, woollen and leather manufs. of Tours. Other princip. manufs. are of files and rasps at Amboise, iron wares, red lead, and pottery, & near Montbazoin is a national gunpowder factory and nitre refinery. The dep. is divided into the 3 arronds. of Tours, the cap., Chinon, and Loches.

INDRET, a small isl. of France, dep. Loire-Inf., formed by the Loire, 5 m. W. Nantes. The French government lately founded an establishment here for building steam boats, in which in 1840, 900 workmen were employed.

INDUS (Sanskrit Sindhu the sea), one of the great rivs. of S. Asia, forming the W. boundary of Hindostan, rises in Tibet, on the N. side of Kailas mntn. (Himalaya), in lat. 31° 20' N., lon. 81° 15' E., near the sources of the Sutleje. It flows N.W. for about 120 m., where it is joined by the Gartope. The conjoint stream now breaks through the Himalaya; and thenceforth it has a S.W. course, separating the Punjab dom. from Afghanistan, and traversing Scinde throughout to its mouths in the Indian Ocean, between lat. 23° and 25° N., and lon. 67° 30' and 69° E. Total course estimated at 1,650 m. Its affls., though not numerous, are important. N. of the Himalaya, it receives the Gartope, Sinh-kha-bab, Zanskar, & Shy-yok rivs. S. of the mountains, the Cabool river enters it, and in lat. 28° 55' N., lon. 70° 28' E., 470 m. from the ocean, it is joined from the N.E. by the Punjnd, which brings to it the united streams of the Punjab, or "five rivers," the Sutleje (Hesudrus), with the Beas (Hyphasis), the Chenab (Acesines), the Ravee (Hydraotes), & the Jhylum (Hydaspes). Below this it has no tributary of much size, but repeatedly subdivides, giving off lateral streams, the principal being the Fulaalee, and Narra branches; and at Triecal, lat. 25° 9', lon. 68° 21' E., the Delta commences, the chief arms of which are the Buggaur, Sata, & Pinyaree. The Indus enters the sea by the Pittee, Hujamree, Khedi-waree, Kuhiwaree, Sir, and Koree mouths. On the banks of the Indus are the towns Moor, Leh, Iskardo, Attock, Kala-Bagh, Deralsmael-Khan, Dera-Ghazee-Khan, Bukkur, Leia, Mittun-Kote, Roree-Bukkur, Snkkur, Sepwan, Hyderabad, Meeanee, Tattah, Garra, Bander-Vikkur, and at its N. entrance Kurachee. Its source is supposed to be 18,000 feet above the sea, its bed at Leh, 10,000 feet, and at Attock, 940 m. from its mouth, it is 1,000 feet above the ocean level, 800 feet across, 60 feet in depth, and has a current of 6 m. an hour. Below that point it runs with great velocity, mostly between high cliffs, as far as Kala-Bagh, after which its course is through a level country, with a breadth usually varying from  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. to upwards of 1 m., and an average velocity of from 2 to 3 m. an hour. During the season when it is lowest, tides are perceptible upward to about 25 m. below Tattah, or 75 m. from the ocean. Mean ann. discharge of water supposed to be 150,212,079,642 tons, a large proportion of its waters being consumed in irrigation and evaporation. The Indus is navigable from the sea as high as the influx of the Cabool river, near Attock, at 942 m. from the sea, & its tributaries are mostly so to the foot of the mntns., about 700 m.; but the channel is so encumbered by shifting banks, as to be only adapted for steamers, and vessels of comparatively small draft. The gavial, or longsnouted alligator, is numerous in the river, and the common alligator is found in its lagoons. The bolun, a cetacean, is also abundant. Fish, especially the pulla, a species of carp, are very abundant, and form a chief article of food for the natives. The country immediately adjacent to its banks, in its Delta especially, is of high fertility; but at no great distance on either side, this region is flanked by a bare desert; and wood fuel is everywhere so scarce, that there is little immediate prospect of making the Indus a high route for steam navigation, unless the coal recently discovered near it in the Punjab and Afghanistan should prove to be suitable in quality, & in adequate quantity for the undertaking.

Estimated area 1,800 Scotch ac. Pop. 1,084. Surface rocky; much less than half of it being arable, and it has only one miserable vill. A church and manse have been erected by government grant. In the middle ages, it was highly celebrated as the seat of an abbey, founded by St Columba, a native of Ireland, in the 6th century, and which long remained the chief seat of learning in the north, and the centre of missionary enterprise undertaken by the Culdees. Its ruined cathedral or abbey, on its E. side, is 160 feet in length by 60 feet in greatest breadth, and like most of its other edifices is of a date long subsequent to the introduction of Romanism; though some scattered relics are supposed to be of a previous era. St Oran's chapel is in the Saxon style; St Mary's and other parts are of a later architecture.

IONIAN ISLANDS, a group in the Mediterranean, off the W. coast of Greece and Epirus, forming a republic dependent on Great Britain, between lat. 36° and 40° N., and lon. 19° and 23° E., and consisting of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Santa Maura, Ithaca, Paxo, and Cerigo, with Fano, Merlera, Meganisi, Kalamo, Servi, Cerigotto, & many smaller islands. United area 1,092 sq. m., and pop. (1844) 219,797, nearly all of Greek descent. Surface mountainous, and generally rugged and covered with heath; but in some of the larger islands are fertile plains. In all the islands, in 1836, 420,151 acres, or somewhat less than half their surface were estimated to be under cultivation, yielding 73,300 bushels of wheat, and 185,660 do. of barley, besides other grains; 210,100 barrels of wine, chiefly grown in the four largest islands, and some of superior quality; 219,340 barrels of olive oil, mostly procured from Corfu and Zante; 17,980,100 lbs. of currants in Zante and Cephalonia, and some cotton, flax, and pulse. Pasture lands, in the same year, were estimated to comprise 44,960 acs., of which 36,775 were in Corfu; & live stock, 14,190 horses, 10,340 horned cattle, 95,950 sheep, and 68,800 goats. Manufs. consist of woollen fabrics for home consumption, soap in Corfu and Zante, salt in Zante and Santa Maura, silk fabrics in Zante, earthenwares, goats' hair carpets, linens, and sacking. Ship building is an important branch of industry, and many of the pop. are occupied in maritime trade and navigation. Exports consist chiefly of the natural produce; imports comprise corn, live stock from Greece and Albania, woven fabrics, cured fish, and colonial produce; and in 1839 amounted in value to 612,299l., much of which was merely in transit. In 1843 the imports of British and Irish produce into the Ionian islands amounted in value to 127,598l. Government vested in a lord high commissioner appointed by Great Britain, and a parliament consisting of a senate and legislative assembly. The assembly, elected for 5 years, is composed of 40 members, 7 elected by each of the three larger islands, 4 by Santa Maura, 4 by the remaining isls., the rest being nominated by the lord high commissioner. The senate consisting of 5 members, elected by the legislative body, with a president appointed by the commissioner, has the executive power, and the press is under the immediate control of it and the commissioner. Each island is governed by a regent, and a council of from 2 to 10 members, partly elected by the inhabitants and partly nominated by the commissioner and senate; and in these are 21 judicial courts, subordinate to a supreme court in Corfu, in which city is the seat of parliament and chief authorities. The established religion is that of the Greek church. Armed force consists of about 3,000 British troops. Marine, 1 frigate and 1 steam-packet (English) stationed at Corfu: and 2 steam-boats bearing the Ionian flag for communicating between the 7 islands. Public rev. (1844) 120,236*l.*; expenditure 143,198*l.*, comprising 2,205 for military protection. Principal towns, Corfu, Zante, Argostoli, and Vathi. These isls. remained subject to Venice from 1386 to 1797. In 1814 they were placed under British protection, and their present constitution of government was drawn up by Sir T. Maitland in 1817.

IONIAN SEA is that part of the Mediterranean between Greece and European Turkey on the E., and Italy and Sicily on the W. Principal inlets, the Gulfs of Taranto, Squillace, Arta and Patras. It communicates N.ward with the Adriatic Sea by the Strait of Otranto, and contains all the Ionian islands except Cerigo.

IOWA (formerly Sioux Territory), a state of the U. S., N. America, between lat 40° 35' & 48° 30' N., and lon. 90° 20' and 102° W., bounded on the E. by the Mississippi, and W. by the Missouri rivers, and on the S. by Missouri State. Estimated area 47,500 sq. m. Pop. (1840) 43,111, (1850) 192,214. Surface undulating; in the W. is a pretty elevated table land. Along the rivers the soil is fertile and well wooded; elsewhere, it is generally bare of timber, and nearly 3-4ths of the surface are covered with prairies. Principal products, maize, wheat, barley, potatoes, and fruits, with some wool, tobacco, and furs. The great lead region, extending from Illinois across the Mississippi here, comprises about 2,880 sq. m. Zinc, iron, and marble are met with. Climate, except on some level river grounds, salubrious. The Chippeway, Ottawa, and several other Indian tribes, occupy portions of the territory. Iowa was separated from Wisconsin in 1838, and admitted into the Union in 1846. It is divided into 40 cos., and sends 1 mem. to Congress. Principal towns, Iowa city, Burlington, and Dubuque.—II. Iowa city, cap. of the territory, is on the river Iowa, 90 m. S.W. Galena. Pop. about 800. It is regularly laid out, and has a capitol of Grecian-Doric architecture, with a dome resting on 22 Corinthian columns.—III. Iowa river, after an E.ward course of 300 miles, joins the Mississippi below Fort-Armstrong. It is navigable for boats from its mouth to Iowa city; and its affl., Red Cedar river, is also navigable to 100 miles above their junction.—IV. a co. in S.W. of Wisconsin. Area 1,300 sq. m. Pop. 3,978.

IPROFEN, a town of Bavaria, circ. Midd.-Franconia, 32 m. N.N.W. Anspach. Pop. 2,069.

IRING, a pa. of Engl., co. Sussex, 2½ m. W.N.W. Midhurst. Area 2,260 ac. Pop. 409.

IPOLY, or EYVEL, a river of central Hungary, joins the Danube 10 m. below Grän, after a S.S.W. course, estimated at 90 m., for the last 35 m. of which it is navigable. On it are the towns Filek, Gyarmath, and Ipolysagh, the last, cap. co. Honth, 42 m. N.N.W. Pesth. Pop. 1,500.

IPPLEPEN, a pa. of Engl., co. Devon, 8½ m. S.S.W. Abbot's Newton. Area 5,090 ac. P. 1,172.

IPPOLITTS, a pa. of Engl., co. Herts, 2 m. S.S.E. Hitchin. Area 2,970 ac. Pop. 919.

IPS, a town of Lower Austria, at the confl. of the Ips with the Danube, 25 m. W. St Polten. Pop. 1,952. It has a military school.

IPSALA, a town of European Turkey, Rumili, sanj. Gallipoli, on the Maritza, at the influx of the river Ipsala, 30 miles N.E. Enos.

IPSBAMBOUL, or ABU-SIMBEL, a vill. of Nubia, on the W. bank of the Nile, 48 m. S.W. Derr, and having two temples, with statues and sculptures, built by the Egyptian Pharaoh Rameses the Great, which are the finest remains of antiquity in the Nile valley, except those at Thebes.

IPSABA, or IPSEBA, an island of the Grecian archipelago, but belonging to Turkey, in the Ægean Sea, 9 m. N.W. Scio. Length & breadth 5 m. each. Surface mntuous; products, cotton, wine, and fruit. On its S. side is a vill. of same name.—Anti-Ipsara is an islet off its W. coast.

IPSDEN, a pa., Engl., co. Oxford, 8½ m. W.N.W. Henley-on-Thames. Area 3,340 ac. Pop. 610.

IPSEBA, or IPIB, Hispiratis, a town of Asiatic Turkey, pash. and 24 m. N.N.E. Erzeroum.

IPSCA, or ISPICA, Sicily. [MODICA.]

IPSITZ, or YBSITZ, a mkt. town of Lr. Austria, 6 m. E.S.E. Waidhofen. Pop. 1,267.

IPSEV, a pa. of England, co. Warwick, 6 m. N.N.W. Alcester. Area 3,000 ac. Pop. 1,029.

IPSTONE, a pa. of Engl., cos. Oxford & Bucks, 6½ m. W.N.W. Henley-on-Thames. Area 1,380 ac. Pop. 347.

IPSTONES, a pa. of England, co. Stafford, 4½ m. N.N.E. Cheadle. Area 6,490 ac. Pop. 1,370. It has an important manuf. of grindstones.

IPSWICH, a parl. and munic. bor., river-port, and town of England, cap. co. Suffolk, on the Orwell, here crossed by a handsome iron bridge, at the influx of the Gipping, and on the E. cos. railway, 66 m. N.E. London, & 24 m. S.E. Bury-St-Edmunds. Area of munic. bor., which comprises 8 pas. and part of 4 others, 1,720 ac.; pop. 19,824. Area of parl. bor., comprising 12 pas. & parts of 6 others, 7,020 ac. Pop. 25,384. The town stands on a slope, sheltered by hills on the E. and N. It is irregularly built; streets mostly narrow, and houses old-fashioned; but it contains many new and substantial buildings; it is well supplied with water, and has a thriving appearance. Principal edifices, the town and co. halls, custom house on the quay, market house, corn exchange, co. and bor. jails, an old monastery of Blackfriars, now used for the grammar-school and town-library, the theatre, assembly rooms, and barracks. Besides the grammar-school, founded by Cardinal Wolsey (a native of the town), Ipswich possesses several minor endowed schools and charities, and a philological society, and mechanics' institution. It has some manufs. of woollen cloths, and of yarn for the Norwich manufs., with extensive iron and soap factories, breweries, snuff mills, and docks, at which large vessels have been built; its chief trade is, however, in the import of coal and Baltic produce, and the export of corn to London. The Orwell is navigable to the town for vessels of 200 tons burden. Customs rev. (1846) 37,012*l.* Reg. shipping (1847) 182 vessels; aggregate burden 14,434 tons. Corp. rev. (1846-7), 5,085*l.* It sends 2 members to the H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,685. Ipswich was burnt by the Danes in 991 and 1000; but in later Saxon and Norman times, it recovered a high share of prosperity. Wm. the Conqueror built a castle here, of which, as of monastic edifices, some traces still exist.

Ipswich, a port and tnsnp., U. S., N. America, Massachusetts, on the navigable Ipswich riv., 2 m. from its mouth, and 26 m. N.N.E. Boston. Pop. 3,000, employed in coasting trade and fisheries.

Ipswich, New, a tnsnp. of the U. S., N. Amer., New-Hampshire, 36 m. S.S.W. Concord. P. 1,578. Iqui, two islands of Japan, S.E. Kiusiu, lat. 31° 30' N., lon. 132° E.

Iquique, a small seaport town of S. Peru, dep. Arequipa, prov. and 40 m. W. Tarapaca, on the Pacific, opposite the island of Iquique. P. 1,000.

Ira, a township of the U. S., N. Amer., New York, 169 m. W. Albany. Pop. 2,283.

IRAK-AJEMI (anc. the Greater Media), a large prov. of Persia, occupying all the central portion between lat. 31° 50' and 37° N., & lon. 46° & 53° E., having N. the provs. Azerbaijan, Ghilan, and Mazanderan, E. Khorassan and Yezd, S. Fars, & Khuzistan, and W. Turkish Kurdistan. Within these limits, it comprises Persian Kurdistan, and in the rest of its extent it consists of the subordinate provs. Ardelan, Louristan, Ispahan, and Kasban. Surface an elevated table-land, traversed by several mntn. ranges. Principal rivers, the Kizil Ouzan, forming a part of its N. boundary, and the Karah, with its affls. in the S.; besides which, there are several large streams, that lose themselves in the sandy deserts which occupy a large proportion of the prov. The watered valleys are fertile, and produce rice, wheat, sesamum, and other grains, excellent fruits, and some tobacco, opium, cotton, saffron, and silk. Camels and horses are the principal beasts of burden; wool and goats' hair are important sources of wealth. In the N.W. several valuable metallic ores are met with, but the mines are not wrought, owing to a deficiency of fuel. Timber is generally scarce. Silk and cotton fabrics, gold and silver thread stuffs of superior quality, leather, glass, and earthenwares are manufd., and with rice, tobacco, opium, & cattle, form the principal exports. Ispahan is the great emporium of trade, and is the rendezvous of large caravans from Bagdad, Herat, and even Surat. Other principal cities are Teheran, Hamadan, Kasbin, Senna, Kermansbah, and Koom.

IRAK-ARABI, Babylonia, Asiatic Turkey, pash. Bagdad, is mostly between the lower courses of the Euphrates and Tigris, and comprises the city of Bagdad, and the ruins of Babylon, Selucia, and Ctesiphon.

The population of 1734, was estimated at 2,872,000; that of 1812, 8,801,827. The number of houses in 1841, was 1,884,360. Proportion of Roman Catholics, 4 to 1 Protestant.

Ireland is of an oblong form, with a walled continuous outline on the E. coast, but deeply indented by numerous inlets on its other sides, with rock bound coasts N. & W. Surface mostly level or undulating. Most of its mountains, as the Wicklow and Mourne mountains, those of Donegal, Mayo, Galway, and Kerry, are in isolated groups towards the coasts and extremities of the island, surrounding a central plain, of limestone formation, comprising a large extent of bog-land, and traversed only by a few low hill ranges and the Sliebhloom mountains. M'Gillicuddy Reeks, in Kerry, is the highest summit in Ireland, and rises to 3,404 feet above the sea. Granite, flanked by Silurian strata, forms the Wicklow range of mountains on the E. coast. The same primary strata prevail in the Mourne mountains, and an extensive trap formation in Antrim of 800 sq. m., is succeeded by clay slate on the west. Granite again appears in the Galway mountains, and the old red sandstone extensively prevail in Munster. The great plain in the centre is formed of mountain limestone, & contains 6 coal districts, the Leinster, or Castlecomer, the Sleeve Arda in Tipperary, the Munster, Loch Allan, Monaghan, and Tyrone, besides a small coal field in co. Antrim. The coal raised S. of Dublin is anthracite, that in the N. is bituminous, but the whole quantity raised does not exceed 55,000 tons annually. Copper and lead are found in the Silurian and mountain limestone. The lower chalk and greensand formations partially prevail, but no tertiary beds. Ireland is well watered. Principal rivers, the Shannon, Barrow, Blackwater, Suir, Nore, Bann, Foyle, Boyne, Slaney, Liffey, Brandon, and Erne. Principal lakes, Neagh, Erne in Ulster, loughs Allen, Corrib, Mask, and Deirgeash in Connaught, and the famed lakes of Killarney, in Munster, near the S.W. extremity of the island. The aggreg. surface of these lakes is estimated at 336 sq. m. Loughs Strangford, Belfast, Foyle, and Swilly, on the N. and N.E. coasts are inlets of the sea. Other principal inlets are Dundrum, Carlingford, Dundalk, & Dublin bays on the E., and Bantry, Dunmanus, Dingle, Tralee, Galway, Clew, Blacksod, Killala, Sligo, and Donegal bays, with the estuaries of the Shannon and Kenmare rivers, on the W. coast. Ireland is much indented by the sea, no locality being above 50 m. from its shores, & this conduces to the general mildness of its climate. Mean winter temp. 39°.9, mean summer 60°.5; mean of year 49°.6 Fahr. Ann. fall of rain 30 to 40 inches, the greatest fall being in the S. & S.W. W. winds prevail for 9 months in the year. The broad leaved myrtle grows luxuriantly in some S. cos., and the arbutus unedo, menziesia, and other plants of S. Europe flourish; while Alpine plants, of the extreme north of Europe, are also found on some of the mountains. Of the 20 million acres of land, it has been estimated that 5½ million are arable, 6½ pasture and marshes, 5 improvable, and the remainder waste. 350,000 ac. are in plantations. Ireland is more fitted for cattle rearing than an agricultural country; yet of late, owing to the rapid increase of population, and other causes, much land that was formerly in pasture has been brought under culture for corn, potatoes, and other crops adapted for human nutriment; and it has been estimated that 4-5ths of the population directly depend for subsistence and employment on the soil. Farms are generally very small, few extend to 40 acres, and mostly vary from 5 to 15 acres in the E. and N. In 1841, out of 883,097 holders of land, 124,487 holdings were less than 1 acre. A few estates are in larger farms, and these are the portions of the country in which there is the least amount of national pauperism. Oats, wheat, and barley, are the principal crops, next to potatoes, which have long formed the staple crop and food of the Irish peasantry; till the failure of these crops in 1845-6-7, when a government grant of 10,350,000l. was found necessary to prevent starvation. About 9-10th of the lands were confiscated by the government of Cromwell and William III., and bestowed on English proprietors, by whose descendants the bulk of Irish property is still possessed. The annual rental of land in 1841 was estimated at 5,000,000l., total property assessed to poor rates was, in 1846, 13,007,420l. In 1845, 19,883 vessels, manned by 93,673 persons, were employed in the fisheries around the coasts, where herrings, pilchards, cod, ling, and hake, are among the more plentiful kinds taken, and in the estuaries, where salmon and eels are abundant; but the salt fish consumed in the country is still imported chiefly from Scotland, and other places. Mineral products comprise marble, of the finest quality, coal, copper, the ore of which is mostly sent to Wales to be smelted, lead, antimony, manganese, fullers' earth, slate, and peat from the bogs, which forms the principal fuel, and is of high importance, owing to the general deficiency of timber. Mannfs. consist of paper, glass, tobacco, and especially linen goods, the chief seat of which latter is Ulster; and in that prov. linens, to the estimated value of 4,000,000l. annually, are made chiefly in the dwellings of the rural population, and disposed of to the merchants of Belfast, and other large towns. The malt trade and distilling of whisky are extensively carried on. In 1839, 10,815,709 galls. of spirits were produced; in 1842, 5,290,650 do.; in 1847, 5,737,687 galls., and 178,369 qrs. of malt. The wool produced in Ireland has been estimated to amount in annual value to 300,000l., and coarse woollen stuffs are made in the centre of the country, besides mixed stuffs and silks in Dublin, Waterford, and other principal cities. In 1838, there were estimated to be in all 95 cotton, woollen, and flax mills, employing 14,870 persons, and steam and water power equivalent to that of 3,650 horses. The conversion of grain into flour and meal has latterly become an extensive business in Ireland; the principal exports from which country are its raw produce, wheat, oats, flour, butter, bacon, beef, eggs, wool, flax, ore, and spirits. Imports comprise coal and cnlm, fish, salt, woollen and cotton yarn, and fabrics, with colonial produce. Total official value of exports in 1835, 17,394,813l., of imports 15,337,097l., mostly to & from Liverpool, Bristol, Glasgow, and some other British ports. This trade with foreign countries is comparatively inconsiderable. In 1844, the value of the exports thither amounted to only 267,977l., of the imports thence to 1,893,767l. In the same year, 2,033 vessels, aggregate burden 208,613 tons, belonged to Ireland. Principal commercial ports are Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick, Waterford, and Londonderry. The Grand and Royal canals intersect Ireland throughout from E. to W., and respectively connect Dublin with Ballinasloe and Tarmonberry, on the Shannon. Railways have yet made little progress, though some of considerable length have been projected. The principal existing ones are from Dublin to Drogheda, and to Kingstown and Dalkey. Ireland has, since 1800, been represented in the British House of Lords by 28 temporal peers elected for life, and 4 spiritual peers, who take office in rotation; and since the Reform act, in the H. of C., by 105 members, 2 elected by each co., 2 by each of the cities Dublin, Cork, Limerick, and Waterford, the towns Belfast and Galway, and Trinity College, Dublin; and 1 by each of 27 other bors. Total reg. electors (1849) 72,216, viz., 34,107 in cos., and 38,109 in cities & boroughs. The electoral franchise rests with much the same classes as in England; in bors., both the parl. and municipal right of voting is in 10l. householders, resident within 7 m. The local government is vested in a Lord-Lieutenant, assisted by the secretary for Ireland, and a privy council nominated by the crown. The judicial power is with the Lord Chancellor, the master of the rolls, and 12 circuit-judges. Each co. has a Lord-Lieutenant, aided by an indefinite number of deputy-lieutenants, and a police force appointed by the crown. Of every 100 inhabitants it is estimated that about 81 are Roman Catholics, 11 episcopalian Protestants, and 8 Protestant dissenters, chiefly Presbyterians, Methodists, & Friends. The Protestants are almost confined to Ulster, and parts of Leinster; but the Protestant church, which has two archbishoprics (Armagh and Dublin) and 10 bishoprics, absorbs a revenue of at least 1,000,000*l.* annually. The R. Cath. Church (unendowed by law) has 4 archbishoprics & 23 bishoprics. The national schools, aided by annual parl. grants of 50,000*l.*, amounted in 1847 to 3,825, attended by 402,632 children. There is a university in Dublin, and colleges have been endowed by government in Cork, Galway, and Belfast. The greater part of the Irish are descendants of the aboriginal Celts, with an admixture towards the north of Saxons, probably the Scotti of the 5th cent., and in later times, of English and Scottish emigrants. The Erse, a dialect of the Celtic, is still the prevailing language. Their dark complexion, and smaller and more slender form of body, distinguish them from the Saxon, as well as their more volatile temperament, their improvidence, their deficiency in personal enterprise and perseverance, and their consequent poverty. In the year 432, Christianity was introduced into Ireland by St Patrick. From the 8th to the 12th century, the country was the scene of perpetual warfare between the petty kings and their chiefs. In 1174, Henry VII. of England conquered the country, and portioned it out among his Anglo-Norman followers. In the reign of King John the division into counties took place, and English laws and customs were partially introduced. But the powerful barons continued to resist the government of Henry VII., James I., and Elizabeth, with repeated outbreaks and rebellions. The most memorable of these were in 1641, 1689, and 1798. In 1800 the union with Ireland and England took place. In 1829 the Roman Catholic emancipation act was passed, in 1832 the Irish reform bill, in 1838 the poor law bill. In 1844 the Irish repeal agitation was at its height; in 1847 a famine took place from the failure of the potatoe crop; and in 1848 an insurrection of the populace took place, but was speedily put down.

ISPAHAN, or ISFAHAN, Aspadana, a famous city, and formerly the cap. of Persia, now cap. the prov. Irak-Ajemi, and of a beglerbeylik, about 215 m. S. Teheran. Lat. 32° 45' N., lon. 51° 50' E. Pop. has been variously estimated from 60,000 to 250,000, it probably exceeds 100,000. It stands enclosed by orchards and plantations, in a fine plain on the Zendarood, here crossed by several noble bridges. It was one of the richest and most populous cities of Asia under Shah Abbas the Great, in the 17th century; but in the 18th, during the Afghan invasion of Persia, its walls were destroyed, and it was reduced to a state of decay, in which much of its site remains. Principal remaining edifices are the great bazaar of Shah Abbas, numerous magnificent buildings around an open space termed the Maidan, upwards of 100 mosques, and various palaces and fine gardens scattered throughout the city, the most remarkable being the palace of the forty pillars, the favourite residence of the later sovereigns. Of late a new palace has been built, and endeavours have been made to improve Is-pahan, and revive cultivation in its vicinity. Its artisans are esteemed the best in Persia; and it has manufs. of all kinds of woven fabrics, gold and silver wares, paper articles, fire arms, sword blades, glass, earthenwares, articles of luxury, which are sent by caravans to Bagdad, Herat, India, and most parts of W. ITALY (anc. Italia, German Italien), a country of S. Europe, formed of a continental portion, a peninsula, and numerous islands. Considered geographically, it extends from the extremity of Sicily to the Rhatian Alps, between lat. 36° 35' and 47° N., and from the W. point of the Cottian Alps to the E. extremity of Terra d'Otranto, between lon. 6° 35' and 18° 35' E. Politically it extends 1° farther W., to include the prov. of Savoy in the Sardinian States. It is bounded E. by the Adriatic and the Ionian Sea, S. by the Mediterranean, W. by France and the Mediterranean, and N. by Switzerland and Anstria. Its natural confines are the Alps and the sea, the W. boundary being determined by the river Varo, and the E. by a pass in the Alps, near Buccari, in the Gulf of Quarnero. Within these limits, Italy comprises 13 separate divisions, including Italian Switzerland:—the canton Tessin (Ticino), and part of the Grisons (Grigione), and Valais; Austrian Italy:—the Italian Tyrol, the kingdom of Lombardy and Venice, Istria, Triest, &c.; French Italy, island of Corsica:—and English Italy, the Maltese islands; the entire area of which is estimated at 100,000 Italian sq. m., and the pop. at upwards of 22 millions. Area and pop. of the countries of Italy-proper as follow:—

	Sq. m.	Pop.	Chief cities and towns.
Sardinian States (including Savoy), .	29,167	4,650,868	Turin.
Principality of Monaco, .	63	6,690	Monaco.
Duchy of Parma, .	2,274	496,803	Parma.
Duchy of Modena, .	2,129	513,348	Modena.
Tuscany (including Lucca, &c.), .	9,177	1,786,875	Florence.
Pontifical or Roman States, .	17,494	2,888,115	Rome.
Republic of San Marino, .	21	7,600	San Marino.
Xgim. of Naples, or of the two Sicilies, .	43,175	8,428,316	Naples.
Total, .	103,490	16,783,215

The continental portion of the country is separated from the rest of Europe by the chain of the Alps, and its waters belong entirely to the basin of the Mediterranean Sea. The coast has a development of about 2,174 m. The shores of the Adriatic are little indented, and on the N. are shallow and bordered by marshes; those of the Ionian Sea are flat only at the foot of the Gulf of Tarentum; the W. shores of Italy are generally more elevated than the eastern, except in the Maremma at the mouths of the Arno, and in the Pontine marshes. The chief islands are Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Elba, Malta, and the Lipari islands. The principal gulfs and bays are, in the Adriatic, those of Venice and Manfredonia, in the Ionian Sea, Tarentum, & Squillace; the Gulf of Genoa and the bays of St Eufemia, Policastro, Salerno, Naples, and Gaeta; and the chief straits those of Messina and Bonifacio. The most prominent capes are Piombino, Argentaro, Circello, Campanella, Spartivento, and Leuca, on the 2 S.

points. The country is generally well watered, but, except the Po, the rivers are small & generally mere torrents; the chief of these are, in the basin of the Adriatic, the Tagliamento, Piave, Brenta, Po, Aterno, Sangro, and Ofanto; in the basin of the Ionian Sea, the Bradano; & in that of the Mediterranean, the Arno, Ombrone, Tiber, Garigliano, and Volturno; the Rhone forms part of the frontier of Savoy. Italy has some of the largest mntn. lakes in Europe, which are celebrated for their picturesque beauty; the chief are Geneva, Maggiore, Garda, and Lugano, portions of which only belong to the territory—Como and Iseo which are entirely Italian. On the S. slope of the Apennines are the small lakes of Trasimene, Bolsena, Bracciano, Fucino, and Celano, mostly of classic interest. Italy is divided naturally into a N. portion beyond the peninsula, including the vast basin of the Po—a prolongation of the basin of the Adriatic—the surface of which rises gradually to Piedmont, in the N.; and the central and S. portion, or the true peninsula, which in general is mntnous. or hilly, traversed throughout its length by the chain of the Apennines, from which considerable plains, nearly level, extend along its shores. From its position, form, and configuration, Italy enjoys a varied and excellent climate, which permits the productions of the temp. & some of those of the torrid zone to mingle on its almost uniformly fertile surface. The exceptions to this are the pestilential marshes, especially the Maremma in Tuscany, the theatre of a prolonged struggle between human industry and the malignity of the climate, & now nearly deserted. Snow lies during the year only in the Alps, at an elevation of 9,500 feet; the valley of the Po has a temperate climate, resembling that of the centre of France; its lakes and portions of the lagoons of Venice are frozen in winter; and the orange and lemon do not ripen in the open air. In the region between lat. 38° 30' and 40° 30' N., snow falls only on the slopes of the mntns., and the olive, orange, and citron, ripen in the open air; between lat. 30° & 41° 30', snow is very rare, & in the S. of Calabria, Sicily, and the neighbouring islands, the climate permits of the cultivation of tropical plants. Mean annual temp.—Milan, lat. 55° 28'—55° 2; Venice, lat. 45° 25'—55° 4; Florence, lat. 43° 46'—59° 2; Rome, lat. 41° 54'—60° 5; Naples, lat. 40° 50'—59° 6; Palermo, lat. 38° 6'—63° 1 Fahr. The prevailing winds of Italy are W. and S.W., during which the air is pure and healthy, but the S. portion of the country is frequently visited by the pestilential winds of Africa, the Sirocco and Libeccio, during which vegetation is arrested, and the human frame becomes languid and feeble; fever is prevalent in the marshy districts. Italy is rich in mineral products, but has few metals, except iron and lead. The Apennines supply the beautiful marble of Carrara. Sulphur, borax, salt, nitre, alum, alabaster, lava, and other volcanic productions, are abundant. There is one active volcano (Vesuvius) in the peninsula, and 4 in the islands (Etna, Stromboli, Vulcano, and Vulcanello); there are many mineral & gaseous springs. The vegetable productions of Italy are extremely varied; the Alps afford excellent pasture, & forests with a great variety of timber. The fauna resembles that of the rest of Europe in similar latitudes, except that it embraces the buffalo, and among vipers the asp, scorpion, and tarantula. Fish are abundant in the rivers. The horses of Piedmont are esteemed, and in the S. their place is supplied by excellent mules. The coasts of Sicily furnish sponges and corals; the chief products of the soil are corn in Sicily and in the plain of the Po, which last also possess the only extensive rice fields in Europe. The chestnut forms an important article of food in the Apennines. The vine, olive, and other fruit trees yield abundant crops; & in the S. the sugar-cane, orange, and fig are cultivated; the culture of the mulberry, and the rearing of the silk-worm, forms an important branch of industry, and cotton is cultivated with success. Cattle are reared to a considerable extent in the N., and goats & swine in the S. The manufs., except in the N., unimportant, comprise silk, chiefly in Lombardy and Piedmont, the other manufs. are woollens, silk, gauze, porcelain, artificial flowers, hats, paper, parchment, and musical instruments. The principal imports are colonial goods, linen, woollen & cotton fabrics, jewellery, and dried fish. Chief exports, silk, wool, oil, honey, straw hats, and Parmesan cheese; but commerce has greatly declined. The arts and sciences are still cultivated with considerable success. Throughout the whole of Italy, except Savoy and Corsica, Italian, in very different dialects, is the language of the country, but it is spoken in its purity only in Tuscany. The established religion is Roman Catholic, but all sects are now tolerated. Notwithstanding the immense natural advantages of the country, the general pop. of Italy is in a state of the most abject poverty, and the value of human life is nearly the lowest in the scale of European nations, the proportion of deaths to the inhabitants being, in Italy generally, 1 in 30, in Naples 1 in 29, while in England the proportion is 1 in 45, and in Norway 1 in 50. Under the Romans, Italy was divided into the provs. of Cisalpine-Gaul, and Venetia in the N.; Italy proper in the centre; and Magna-Græcia in the S. The political arrangements of Modern Italy were changed for a time by the aggressions of Napoleon. In 1801, Savoy and Piedmont were united to France, the duchy of Milan formed the Cisalpine republic, to which, in 1805, the duchy of Venice and its continental possessions were added, forming together the kingdom of Italy; & Genoa was incorporated with France; Naples was seized, the pope & the other sovereigns were deposed, and thus all Italy, except Sicily and Sardinia, was subjected to the Emperor of France. After the dismemberment of the French Empire in 1814, the states were restored to their former rulers, except the duchies of Milan and Venice, which were given to Austria, and formed the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom. JAMAICA, one of the great Antilles, and the principal of the British W. India islands, in the Caribbean Sea, between lat. 17° 40' and 18° 30' N., and lon. 76° 15' and 78° 25' W., about 100 m. S. Cuba. Length 150 m., average breadth 40 m. Area 4,250 sq. m. Pop. (1844) 377,493, of whom 15,776 were whites, 68,629 coloured, 293,128 black. The blue mountains traverse the whole length of the island from E. to W., varying in elev. from 5,000 to 6,000 ft.; on their S. side the shores are abrupt, the surface broken, and the scenery bold: on the N. the country is undulating, and descends gradually to the sea, and this side of the island is reputed to be the more healthy, though all insalubrity ceases at an elevation of 1,400 feet. Mean annual temp. at Kingston, 78° .8; summer, 81°; winter, 76° .2. Rainy seasons, from May to August, and from October to November. Earthquakes are frequent; hurricanes less so than in the other W. India islands. The island is well watered. Principal rivers, the Minho, Black river, and Cobre, all disemboguing on the S. coast. The mountains are of calcareous formation. Soil naturally less productive than in many of the W. India islands; but most of the staple products of tropical climates are raised, sugar being the chief. Indigo, cotton, and cacao were formerly more important staples than at present. Maize, Guinea corn, and rice are the chief grains raised. The plantain, banana, sweet potato, &c., compose the principal food of the blacks. Fine fruits are plentiful. Sunflower seeds are raised for the manuf. of oil. Other products are cinnamon, fine woods, and artificial grasses. Live stock in general are good, as well as numerous. About 7-8ths of the land belong to private individuals: estates seldom exceed 1,200 acres, and have become more subdivided since the epoch of slave emancipation; subsequently to which event the amount of produce fell off considerably, but of late there has been a reactionary increase in the production of sugar, rum, and pimento. In 1841, the exports consisted of 65,637,739 lbs. (or 24,812 tons) of sugar, worth 1,014,941*l.*; 1,198,471 galls. of rum, valued at 242,448*l.*; coffee, 7,207,289 lbs., worth 286,543*l.*; pimento, 3,244,181 lbs., worth 30,450*l.*; ginger, 618,962*l.*; dye and hard wood to 48,250*l.*; copper, 153,850 lbs., worth 4,896*l.*; the total exports being estimated at 1,912,815*l.*; and imports in the same year to 1,339,904*l.* in value. In 1844, the exports comprised coffee, 7,674,060 lbs.; sugar, 67,954,997 lbs.; rum, 996,262 galls., and ginger, 634,716 lbs., chiefly exported to the United Kingdom, & pimento, 3,509,494 lbs., nearly 2-3ds of which went to the U. States. Total value of exports 1,609,620*l.*, of which those to Gt. Brit. & Irel. amounted to 1,235,893*l.* Value of imports in same year, 1,478,005*l.*; those from the United Kingdom amounting to 840,085*l.* Vessels entering the various ports of Jamaica in 1844, 800, aggregate burden 116,196 tons; cleared out, 744, burden 111,801 tons. Reg. shipping (1844), 116 vessels, aggregate burden 4,363 tons. Principal ports, Kingston, Montego Bay, and Falmouth.

Jamaica is divided into 3 cos., Middlesex, Surrey, and Cornwall, and subdivided into 21 parishes. Government vested in a governor, and a council of 12 members, nominated by the crown, and a legislative assembly of 45 members, 2 elected by every pa., and one by each of the chief towns. All male inhabitants having freeholds of 10*l.* a-year, may vote for representatives, which latter must have an estate of 300*l.* a-year, or personal property worth 1,000*l.* A supreme court in Spanish-town, and courts of assize in each co., sit three times yearly. The island is the see of a bishop, whose diocese extends over the Bahamas and Honduras. Military force consists usually of about 3,000 regular troops, and a militia of from 16,000 to 18,000 men. Public revenue and expenditure, annual average, 500,000*l.* Besides Spanish-town, the cap., and Kingston, the chief port (between which a railway has been lately completed), the isl. contains the town Port Royal, on its S. side; & the maritime vills. Mount Luca, Montego, Falmouth, and St Ann's on its N. coast. Jamaica was discovered by Columbus in 1494, colonized by Spaniards in 1510, and taken by the English in 1655. The maroons, originally runaway slaves, obtained a tract of land on the N. side of the island in 1738, on which they built two small towns, and, with the exception of a rebellion in 1795, have remained peaceable.

JAPAN, an empire of E. Asia, comprising the islands Niphon, Kiuisu, and Sikokf, with the dependencies Yesso, the S. part of Tarakai or Saghalien, and many smaller islands, situated between lat. 26° 35' & 49° N., and lon. 129° & 150° E., having W. the Strait of Corea, and Sea of Japan, and on other sides the Pacific Ocean. Area has been set down at 266,500 sq. m., and pop. very uncertainly estimated at from 25 millions to 50 millions. These islands, especially Niphon and Kiuisu, are extremely irregular in shape, their coasts greatly indented, and surface very uneven. The mountains Fusi and Siro-Jama in Niphon are active volcanoes, and estimated to rise respectively to 12,000 and 8,000 feet above the sea, & snow clad. Rivers numerous, and generally wide at their mouths, but their courses are short and not navigable for many miles inland. Of the lakes, the principal appears to be Fakoni, regarded by the Japanese with superstitious reverence. The interior of Japan, however, remains quite unexplored by Europeans. In a country extending over 15° of lat., the climate is so varied, that almost every prov. has different products; it is in general mild and healthy, but hurricanes and earthquakes are of frequent occurrence. The soil is said to be in many parts sterile, but it is very carefully cultivated; agriculture being compulsory by sumptuary laws. Products are in great variety; the chief are rice, potatoes, gourds, numerous fruits common in S. Europe, hemp, cotton, ginger, tobacco, tea in large quantity; oak, maple, iron-wood, cypress, and fir timber, varnish, camphor, soja delichos from which soy is made; bullion, iron, lead, tin, copper, diamonds and other gems, coal, lime, sulphur, nitre, salt, and amber. Cattle rearing is unimportant; buffaloes and oxen are used only for draught, and sheep are scarce. Fish and coral abound on the coasts; pearls and ambergris are obtained. In some rural arts, the Japanese are unequalled; such as the dwarfing of forest trees, and raising radishes and other bulbous roots of an enormous size. In manufacturing industry, generally, they equal the Chinese, and their sword-blades and other metallic goods, telescopes, clocks, silk and cotton fabrics, porcelain, lacquered and japanned wares, and paper are particularly excellent. Some trade is suffered with Chinese merchants, who bring broad-cloths and other woollen stuffs to Nangasaki, in return for sea-slug, copper, and lacquered wares; & the Dutch are permitted to send annually 2 ships to the same port with wax, camphor, spices, ivory, lead, iron-bars, quicksilver, glass wares, musk, sapan wood, sugar, piece goods, and woollens, for which they take back copper, camphor, silk, lacquered goods, wax, pitch, wheat, and Japanese manufs. No commerce is allowed with other foreign nations, and efforts of the Russians, French, and more recently of the Americans, for its establishment, have been decisively repulsed. Two centuries of peace, has elevated the civilization of the Japanese over all other extra-European nations of the old world. The law, which separates them from intercourse with other countries, has forced them to draw on their own resources, hence the empire is nearly independent of external aid,—it is a world in itself. The government is despotic, and like some others in Asia, is shared by ecclesiastical and military sovereigns. The mikado, or lord of the dairi, or court of mikho, is the nominal head of the empire, has almost divine honours and exerts religious rule, and was anciently invested with all the authority; but in the 12th century, a siogun, or high military officer was appointed, one of whose successors, in 1583, assumed the rank of a second emperor: since which period the siogun has maintained the actual sway, the dairi sovereign being consulted by him only regarding relations with foreign powers. The siogun, who resides at Yedo, is assisted by a council of five hereditary princes, and by a senate which forms the legislative body, and decides in all civil and criminal cases. A kind of feudal system prevails; the princes, of whom there are about 200, governing different districts, are obliged to maintain troops in readiness to move at the order of the siogun. The executive duties are performed by 7 boards,—those of taxation, commerce, public works, police, criminal justice, military affairs, and religion. Japan is divided into 8 provs., 68 depts., and 622 dists., the governors of which are termed dai-mio, "high named," and hold their offices direct from the dairi sovereign; or sai-mio, "well named," who are appointed by the siogun. The laws are very rigorous; many popular rights and customs, however, appear to exist, & the Japanese are certainly less corruptly governed, and less shackled by ancient usages than the Chinese. The ancient religion is the sin-siu, whose priests were said to be descended of the sun, but the majority of the pop. are adherents of Buddhism, introduced into Japan about the 6th century of our era, though some profess the doctrines of Confucius. The Japanese are of the Mongolian race, and are stout and well made. They have a written literature, some science, and a taste for music. Their language is different from that of the Chinese.

JAPAN (SEA OF), is that portion of the Pacific Ocean, situated between lat. 35° and 52° N., and lon. 128° and 142° E., bounded by the islands of Japan on the E., the countries Manchouria and the peninsula of Corea on the W. JAVA, the principal of the Dutch E. India isls., between lat. 5° 52' and 8° 50' S., and lon. 105° 15' E., separated E. from Bali by the strait of Bali, and W. from Sumatra by the strait of Sunda, and having N. the sea of Java, and S. the Indian Ocean. Length, E. to W., 570 m., breadth varies from 48 to 115 m. Estimated area, including the contiguous island Madura, 60,000 sq. m.; and pop. (1845) 9,530,781; comprising Europeans and their descendants 16,308; natives 9,401,712; Chinese 106,033; Arabs, Bughis, &c., 31,216; slaves 5,111. The S. coast is high & steep, with few indentations. A mntn. chain extends through the centre from W. to E., with a mean elevation of 1,000 feet, having numerous volcanic peaks, some of which rise to 1,000 feet. Its N. coast is low and marshy, and lined with numerous small islands. Principal river the Solo, besides which many are navigable for several m. from the sea, or used for floating down timber, and other raw produce from the interior. The rocks are chiefly basaltic and volcanic, and the soil is extremely fertile. Java is supposed to be capable of supporting many times its present amount of population. At present only about 1-3d part of the surface is under culture; but the island is the granary of the Asiatic Archipelago. Temp. hot in the plains, but cooler in the elevated parts. Earthquakes and thunder storms are common, hurricanes rare. Rice is the principal grain, and is cultivated all along the coast, as also in all the low grounds wherever irrigation can be effected. Coffee is the great staple of export; it is raised in most of the uplands, especially in the Preanger or Prianga, regencies on the W. part of the island, and with sugar, its culture has greatly increased within the last few years. Indigo, tobacco, cotton, cinnamon, maize, and other dry grains, pulses and vegetable oils, cocoa, and sago, are other principal products. Java is the only island of the E. Archipelago of which the teak tree is a native. This tree grows in dense forests on the hills, and is superior to that of Pegu, though not equal to that of Malabar. Tigers, tiger cats, and leopards, and the jackall, abound. The rhinoceros is also a native, but no elephants, camels, or asses. Buffaloes are numerous, and a small breed of horses. Black cattle and goats are common; sheep and hogs are scarce. Domestic poultry are plentiful. Crocodiles and serpents abound, and fish are numerous in the adjacent seas. Few minerals are known to exist, but iron, salt, sulphur, and nitre, are obtained. Manufs. of cotton fabrics, and other household necessaries are general, and the Javanese excel the nations of the neighbouring isls. in the production of most manufactured goods; but the colony is essentially agricultural, and nearly all its exports consist of vegetable produce. Total value of the merchandise exported from Java and Madura in 1841, 5,063,477*l.*, of which amount coffee stood for 2,403,667*l.*, sugar 1,042,706*l.*, indigo 494,917*l.*, & rice 253,579*l.*, the principal remaining articles being arrack, provisions, hides, cinnamon, rattans, spices, Banca tin, tobacco, edible birds' nests, and salt. Imports comprising cottons, woollens, and other manufactured goods, wines, spirits, iron, hardwares, machinery, opium, and articles of luxury, amounted in the same year to 2,456,930*l.* Ships entering the ports, chiefly Dutch or Asiatic, 1,957, aggregate burden 134,806 tons. Trade with Holland absorbs 5-7ths of the whole, and is chiefly carried on by the Dutch E. I. Company. Batavia, the cap., is the centre of at least half of the general trade. Gov. administered by a gov.-general, with authority over all the Dutch E. I. colonies, and assisted by a secretary-general, and a council of 4 members, of Dutch descent. Java is divided into 22 residencies, in each of which are an European governor, and secretary, and various sub-residents. The provs. are subdivided into arronds, and communes, in each of which is a justice of the peace. Three superior tribunals and courts-martial are seated at Batavia, Samarang, & Surabaya, the whole subordinate to a supreme court at Batavia. Perfect religious toleration exists, and Europeans are not prevented from going to Java (as formerly to British India), though the permission of the governor-general is necessary to their settling there. Public improvements have lately been much extended. A good road traverses the island in its entire length; many forts have been constructed in the interior; and commercial stations planted in the S. part of the island; regular steam communication is kept up with Singapore. Several native states exist in the interior, under Dutch protection, the principal caps. of which are Surakarta and Yugyakarta. Java remained under Hindoo sovereignties until 1478, when it was conquered by the Arabs, and its possession has since been chiefly Mohammedan. It contains the ruins of several considerable cities and temples, the principal being Mojopahit and Boro-Budor, and various large structures of substantial architecture are scattered over its surface. The Javanese are of the Malay family, are short, thick-set, and robust. It is presumed that Hindoos, at an early period, settled in the island, as Hindoo monuments of antiquity are found. The religion is Mohammedan, mixed with Buddhism. 3 dialects, of the Malay language, are used; and they have an ancient sacred language, containing a number of Sanscrit words. They have a national literature, & translations from the Arabic & Sanscrit. The Javanese are superior in civilization to other natives of the Indian Archipelago. The Portuguese formed a settlement on it in 1511, and the Dutch in 1575. The British held the isl. from 1811 to 1816.

JERIM (pron. Yerin), a town of Arabia Yemen, 78 m. S. Sana.

JERSEY, Cæsarea, the largest and most S. E. of the islands belonging to Great Britain, in S. of the English Channel, 13 m. W. the coast of France (Cotentin), and 35 m. S. Portland-isle. Lat. of St Helier's 49° 11' 3" N., lon. 2° 7' W. Length, E. to W., 12 m., average breadth 5 m. Area 39,000 ac. Pop. 47,544. Coasts rocky and abrupt; the only considerable inlet is St Aubin's Bay, on the E. side, skirted by a sandy shore. Surface undulating, the hill ranges consisting of granite and schist, run mostly N. to S., enclosing several fertile valleys. Climate very mild. Mean annual temp. 51° .9, mean summer (2° .2, mean winter 42° .6. Property greatly subdivided, and little corn is raised, the chief produce being apples; the whole island appears very like a continuous orchard, dotted with picturesque vills. About 2,000 hhd. of cider are exported. Cows of a small and good breed are numerous, and butter is exported to England. Sheep are few, and most part of the mutton consumed is imported from France. Off the S. E. coast are extensive oyster beds, resorted to by a large fishing fleet belonging to the island. Manufs. are wholly insignificant, except those of hosiery and shoes. The trade is active and increasing, owing to the absence of import duties, and the privilege that the Channel Islands possess of exporting their own produce to England, subject only to the same duties imposed on the produce of Great Britain. Exports to England are chiefly cattle, potatoes, spirits, oysters, and granite, in return for cotton and woollen fabrics, hardware and cutlery, glass, soap, earthenwares, about 20,000 tons of coal annually, and general merchandise. Imports from France are wine, brandy, skins, fruit, and poultry; from Spain and Portugal, brandy and wines; from N. Europe, timber, tallow, hemp, linens, and corn, in return chiefly for colonial produce from the W. Indies and Brazil, with which countries Jersey has an active and direct commerce. Reg. shipping (1837) 244 vessels, aggregate burden 23,826 tons, besides 500 oyster smacks. Steamers communicate frequently with Southampton, Weymouth, St Malo, and Granville; and Jersey is the residence of numerous English families of limited income. It has its own legislature, the "states" or insular parliament consisting of 36 members, chosen by the inhabitants, their acts being confirmed or annulled, in special cases, by the Viscount, or English governor. From the decisions of its royal court, appeal lies only to the sovereign in council. The military governor has under him usually about 300 regular troops, besides which Jersey has a militia of 2,500 men, with an artillery battalion. The island is divided into 12 par. in the diocese of Winchester. Its native inhabitants speak a French patois, and preserve many Norman feudal customs, the Channel Isls. having formed a part of the Norman dom., and remained attached to Engl. since the Conquest. Principal towns, St Helier, the cap., and St Aubin.

JERSEY CITY, a town of the U. S., N. Amer., New Jersey, on the Hudson riv., opposite New York, & 58 m. N.E. Trenton. Pop. 3,072. It is regularly laid out & well built. It has a lyceum, female & high schools, manufs. of pottery wares to 200,500 dollars, and glass wares to 200,000 do. annually, with iron works, timber yards; and suburbs, in which are rope, starch, and carpet factories. The Morris canal, and Paterson and Hudson railway terminate at Jersey, which also communicates with Philadelphia by the New Jersey railroad, and with New York, by steam-boats.

JERUMENHA, a town of Brazil, prov. Piahi, on rt. b. of the Gorguea, a tributary of the Parahyba, 95 m. W. Oeiras. Pop. 3,000.

JERUSALEM (Hebrew Kagushah, Arabic El Kuds or Khoddes, "the holy," ancient Hierosolyma, and Ælia Colonia), a famous city of Palestine, interesting as the seat of the most important events described in Holy Writ, is now comprised in the Turkish pash. Damascus, and near the centre of the mountain region, between the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea, 33 m. S.E. its port, Jaffa, and 2,660 feet above the sea. Lat. 31° 46' 43" N., and lon. 35° 13' E. Mean annual temp. 62°.6; summer 73°.8; winter 49°.6. Stationary pop. variously estim. from 10,000 to 20,000, but about Easter the number is annually augmented by a great crowd of Christian, Mohammedan, and Jewish pilgrims. The modern city, on a tongue of land, between the valley of the Kedron (valley of Jehosaphat) on the N. and E., and that of Gihon (valley of Hinnom), which joins the former immediately on the S.E., occupies the four hills of Zion and Acra on the W., and Moriah and Bezetha on the E.; these hills being separated by a deep longitudinal valley, extending from N. to S., and the two former again by a transverse valley, the ancient Tyropæon. The hills are of limestone, & the surrounding country is not very fertile. The city is about 2½ m. in circ., surrounded by stately walls of hewn stone, built in the 16th century, and probably enclosing the same area that Jerusalem has had since the days of Hadrian; but the city, previously to its destruction by Titus, is conjectured to have been nearly twice as extensive, and a part even of Mount Zion, the site of the citadel of David, is not comprised within the modern walls. Jerusalem is at present entered by four gates facing toward the cardinal points. The public ways are narrow, ill paved, and dull; but the houses are in general better built, and the streets cleaner than those of Alexandria, Smyrna, or even Constantinople. The dwellings are of hewn stone, often large, and furnished with small domes, which are apparently peculiar to the towns of Judea. All the edifices possessing any interest are of a religious character. On Mount Moriah, is an oblong area, 510 yards in length, N. to S., by a breadth varying from 318 to 350 yards, & which anciently formed the site of the famous temple, and probably, also, of the fortress of Antonia. This area is still enclosed by walls, which on the E. side form a part of the outer wall of the city, and both there, and at the S.W. corner, are portions composed of stones of vast size, considered to have formed parts of the identical walls raised by Solomon or his successors. Dr Robinson confidently supposes that he discovered the traces of an ancient bridge connecting the temple with Mount Zion, across the valley of the Tyropæon, & mentioned by Josephus in his account of the capture of the city by Titus. The tower of Hippicus, on the W. side of the city (mentioned by ancient authorities as the starting point of the three lines of walls, which at different periods enclosed it), is still to be identified, as are the pools of Hezekiah, Gihon, and Siloam, the vaults and cisterns of the temple, and some of the ancient gates now walled up; but few other sites of antiquity are now traceable, and the localities pointed out by the Monks as those of the actual Via Dolorosa of the Holy Sepulchre, &c., have, at best, but an apocryphal claim to their titles. Among the most conspicuous modern buildings, are the mosque of Omar (Kubbel-es-Sukhra, "dome of the rock") an elegant octagonal edifice erected between A. D. 686 and 693, in the centre of the temple area; the mosque of El Akssa, at the S.W. extremity of the same area; the gorgeous church of the Holy Sepulchre, a Byzantine edifice, erected by Helena, the mother of Constantine the Great, over the reputed site of the sepulchre, on Mount Acra; the Greek, Coptic, and Latin convents, and the ruined palace of the Hospitalers, on the same mount; the Armenian and Syrian convents, and the church of St James on Mount Zion; the church of St Anna, and the reputed birth-place of the Virgin on Mount Bezetha; and the modern citadel close to the Jaffa gate. Between Mounts Moriah and Bezetha is a deep reservoir, which the monks have named Bethesda; Robinson, however, conjectures that the true Pool of Bethesda was what is now called the Fountain of the Virgin, in the valley of Jehosaphat, without the walls, and which communicates with the Pool of Siloam by an artificial subterraneous conduit beneath Mount Ophel. Outside of the walls are also the (so-called) House of Caiaphas, now an Armenian convent, the Moslem tomb and mosque of David, the Armenian, Greek, and Latin cemeteries all on Mount Zion; the Pools of Gihon, & the remains of an anc. aqueduct; on the N., the Mohammedan ceneteries, the edifices designated the tombs "of the kings and of the judges." On the E., in the valley of Jehoshaphat are numerous other tombs, and the garden of Gethsemane, beyond which rises the Mount of Olives, having on its S. and S.W. the Mount of Offence and vill. of Sилоam. On the S. the valley of Hinnom (Gihon), is bounded by the Hill of Evil Counsel. Jerusalem has some manufs. of soap, but its principal trade is in rosaries, and similar products made in the city; in the middle ages vast quantities of earth were removed from holy localities within the walls, and shipped to form the famous campo santo at Pisa. The city was originally taken from the Jebusites by the Hebrews under Joshua about B.C. 1400; was taken & destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar, B.C. 598; rebuilt by command of Cyrus, B.C. 586; again taken by Ptolemy Soter, B.C. 324, & subjugated to Egypt; afterwards held by the Maccabees; taken by Pompey, B.C. 63; and held as a Roman city under Herod, who rebuilt the temple, until its almost total destruction by the troops of Titus, A. D. 70. At this period, in the words of Pliny, it was the most famous city, not only of Palestine, but of the whole east. In A. D. 135, the Jews were finally dispersed, and the city was again rebuilt by Adrian. It was captured by the Persians in 614, by the Saracens under Omar in 637, in 1099 by the Crusaders, under Godfrey of Bonillon, & held by the Christians for 88 years, when it was again captured by the forces of Saladin in 1187; & it has remained under Turkish government ever since, except for a short interval during 1832, when it was taken by the Egyptians under Ibrahim Pasha. It has since become the see of a Protestant bishop, appointed alternately by the governments of Great Britain and Prussia. The pop., consisting of Mohammedans, Jews, and Christians, are generally very poor. The language spoken is the Arabic. (See for further information the works of Josephus, Tacitus, Reland, Clarke, Elliott, Richardson, Chateaubriand, and especially Robinson's Researches in Palestine, Wilson's Lands of the Bible, and Kitto's Biblical Cyclopaedia.)

JESSELMERE, or JESALMIR, one of the five principal Rajpoot states of W. Hindostan, comprising a large part of the Indian desert, between

lat. 26° and 28° N., and lon. 69° and 72° E., enclosed by Scinde, Bhawalpoor, Bicanore, & Joudpoor. Area 9,779 sq. m. Pop. 300,000 (?). Cultivation very limited; irrigation difficult; and the inhabitants subsist chiefly on coarse grains. Live stock, mineral products, and manufs. are very few, and what little wealth the country possesses is due to its position on the route between Central India and the Indus. From 20 to 25 thousand maunds of opium annually pass through Jesselmere into Scinde for exportation. Imports comprise indigo, cotton cloths, sugar, and metals. Public revenue about 20,000l. a-year, more than half of which is derived from transit duties.—Jesselmere, is its only town of importance; it is 138 m. W.N.W. Joudpoor. Pop. estimated at 20,000. It is about 2 m. in circ., enclosed by a loose stone rampart, and has a strong fort on a scarp rock. Town regularly laid out, well built, and the residence of many opulent merchants, being on the high commercial route between Malwab and the port of Kurachee.

KAFFRARIA, CAFFRARIA, or KAFIRLAND, an extensive region of S.E. Africa, represented in old maps as extending N. to Abyssinia, but now understood to comprise the space between lat. 32° and 34° S., and lon. 27° 30' and 29° 30' E., bounded E. & S. by the Indian Ocean, S.W. & W. by the Keiskama (which separates it from the dist. Victoria), the Chumie, and the Kliss Plaats rivers, and N., indefinitely, by a chain of mountains in a direction from E. to W. The S.E. portion of the country (called by the natives Amakosa, and inhabited by the Kosas, or Kafirs proper) is watered by numerous streams, the chief of which are the Great Kei, Somerset, Buffalo, and Keiskama, all of which rise in the mountainous country of the interior, and flow S.E. to the Indian Ocean. Beyond these mountains, on the N., is the country of the Amatembu Kafirs, or Tambookies, the rivers of which are chiefly affluents of the Great Kei. The mountains are composed of trap rocks. Valuable minerals are rare. Soil in many places fertile. The climate differs widely from that of the Cape Colony. Here winter is the dry season. From May to August it seldom rains. In summer the rainy season sets in with terrific thunder storms. In spring the temp. of the plains seldom exceed 50° Fahr.; in summer it is between 70° and 90°, and before storms it frequently rises to upwards of 100° Fahr. The Caffres are described as hospitable, intelligent, acute, and brave, but dishonest and superstitious. They practise the rite of circumcision. They are generally believed to be of the negro race, and are of a dark brown colour. The men are tall and active, and more handsome than the women. They have no written characters; but their language is sonorous, resembling Italian. They are simple in their habits, and live on the produce of the chase, and the milk supplied by their numerous herds. Their chief vegetable products are maize, millet, and water melons. They are passionately fond of tobacco. The Caffres are divided into hordes, and governed by hereditary chiefs, who exercise absolute rule. They have made many incursions into the Cape Colony, and from 1835 to 1846, frequent skirmishes occurred between them and the colonists, which led to the extension of the colony from the Keiskama to the Great Kei river, a district now called British Kaffraria. It is divided into the counties of Northumberland, York, Sussex, Middlesex, Cambridge, Lincoln, and Bedford. Cap. King-William town, on the Buffalo, co. Middlesex. The principal forts are Wellington and Cox.

KAFIRISTAN, or KACFRISTAN ("land of the Kafirs"), a country of Central Asia, between lat. 35° and 36° N., and lon. 69° 20' and 71° 20' E.

enclosed by Afghanistan, Koondooz, Badakshan, and Chitral. Estimated area 7,000 sq. m. It comprises a part of the S. declivity of the Hindoo Coosh, and is traversed by affluents of the Cabool riv. Its narrow, but fertile valleys produce an abundance of fruits, with some wheat and millet, and feed large herds of cattle, sheep, and goats. The inhabitants, called Stah Posh, or Kafrs ("infidels"), by their neighbours, are a remarkable race, resembling Europeans in their persons & many of their habits; they live in a very rude and primitive state, and exhibit perpetual enmity towards Mohammedans, by whom their country has been repeatedly invaded, but never conquered. They are very skillful as workers in metals & wood, and are distinguished from surrounding tribes, by drinking wine, sitting on raised seats, exposing their dead without burial, using a language wholly unlike the dialects of the Afghan, Mogul, Hindoo, or adjacent Asiatic nations, with the Caucasian features & complexion, and claiming to be brothers of the Feringi (Europeans). Principal vill. is stated to be Caundais, with about 500 houses; but little is really known of this region.

Virginia, S. Tennessee, and W. the Mississippi, dividing it from Missouri. Greatest length 400 m., breadth 170 m. Area estimated at 42,000 sq. m. P. (1850) 902,405, of whom 221,768 are slaves. Surface in the S.E. is broken by the Cumberland mountains, a branch of the Alleghanies; in the centre is a rich undulating tract, bordering the Ohio, it is hilly and well wooded, as in the level lands of the W. Princip. rivers, besides the Ohio & Mississippi, are the Cumberland, Green, Kentucky, Licking, and Tennessee, all affs. of the Ohio. Soil rests throughout on a bed of limestone, apertures in which greatly diminish the rivers in dry seasons. Climate healthy, except near the Mississippi; the winters are, for N. Amer., mild and humid. Oats, wheat, tobacco, and hemp, are staple products. The crop of tobacco in 1840 reached to nearly 53½ millions lbs., being inferior in amount only to that of Virginia. Maize, and most other grains, cotton, flax, potatoes, apples, and peaches, are raised. The rearing of horses, mules, cattle, and hogs, for export, may, however, be ranked as the prime object of rural industry. The horses amount to nearly half a million, and the breed is greatly esteemed throughout the Union. Salt, from mineral springs, is exported in large quantities; iron, coal, marble, lime, and nitre, are other mineral products. Manufs. of cottons, woollens, iron-wares, cordage, and maple sugar, are increasing; and the capital invested in manufs. was in 1840 estimated at nearly 6,000,000 dollars. Imports and exports are chiefly through New Orleans, by the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. In 1840, 79 m. of railway were open in this state. The Louisville and Portland canal, avoiding the rapids of the Ohio, 2½ m. in length, admits the largest steamers, and cost 730,000 dollars. The state governor, and the senate, consisting of 88 members, are elected for 4 years; the house of representatives, consisting of 100 members, is elected annually. Rev. (1844) 392,422 dollars.

KILDARE, an inland co. of Ireland, Leinster, having N. Meath, E. the cos. Dublin and Wicklow, S. Carlow, and W. King's and Queen's co. Area 653 sq. m., or 418,436 ac., of which about 50,000 are comprised in the bog of Allen. Inhabited houses 18,556. Pop. 114,448. Surface mostly flat. Chief rivers the Boyne, Barrow, and Liffey. Climate moist, owing to the prevalence of bogs. Soil mostly a deep and fertile loam; and the Curragh of Kildare, a tract in its centre, is scarcely to be matched for the excellence of its turf and rich verdure. Chief crops, wheat, oats, and barley. The best English breeds of cattle have been introduced. Many estates are large, and farms less subdivided than in most other Irish cos., but farming is very backward. Average rent of land 18s. an acre. Annual value of land (1847) 290,550l. Minerals and manufs. unimportant. The principal trade is in corn and flour, the export of which is facilitated by the river Barrow, and Royal and Grand canals and their branches, which connect the co. with Dublin, Waterford, and the Shannon. A good deal of peat is sent from the co. to Dublin. The Great S. and W. railway intersects the co. Kildare. The co. contains 10 baronies and 113 pas. in the dioceses of Kildare and Dublin. Principal towns, Athy, Kildare, and Naas. It sends two members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1849) 967. Kildare has since 1316 given title to the Fitzgeralds, now Dukes of Leinster.—Kildare, a market town, episcopal see, and pa., in above co., on the Great S. and W. railway, 30 m. W.S.W. Dublin. Pop. of pa. 2,654; do. of town 1,629. It stands on an elevated plain, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  m. from the common, or curragh, & consists mostly of cabins, intermixed with ancient edifices. It suffers greatly from want of water. It has a very ancient cathedral, partly ruined, and containing the burial vault of the Fitzgeralds, a part of a chapel, reputed to date from the 5th century, a round tower, 132 feet in height, remains of an abbey & of a castle, a co. infirmary, a Roman Catholic chapel, nunnery, friary, market-house, jockey-club, and numerous inns, greatly frequented during the celebrated Curragh races in April, June, Sept., and October. The bishopric, now united with that of Dublin, comprises 81 pas. in King's, Queen's, and Kildare cos. It is also the see of a Roman Catholic bishop.

KILDONAN, a pa. of Scotland, co. Sutherland, about 20 m. N.N.W. Dornoch. Pop. 256. It is mountainous & contains several Pictish towers.

KILDRUMMIE, a pa. of Scotland, co. Aberdeen, on the Don, 15 m. S.S.W. Huntly. Pop. 627. Surface a rich level, enclosed by hills, on one of which stand the remains of Kildrummie castle, famous for its siege by Edward I. in 1306.

KILDWICK, a pa. of England, co. York, W. Riding, 4 m. S.S.E. Skipton. Area 25,990 ac. Pop. 10,607, partly employed in worsted factories.

KILHAM, a pa. of Engl., co. York, E. Riding,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  m. N.N.E. Great Driffield. Area 7,660 ac. Pop. 1,140. The vill. is pleasantly situated on a declivity of the Wolds, and had formerly a market.

KILIA, or KILIANOVA, a fortified town of the Russian dom., gov. Bessarabia, on the Kilia, or north arm of the Danube, at its delta, 12 miles from its mouth. Pop. 7,000. It is ill built, and its harbour is shallow; it has, however, some trade, and several churches and mosques.—Kili, or Kilia, is the name of a fortress on a bay of the Black Sea, Anatolia, 34 m. N.E. Constantinople.

KILIMANJARO, a snowy mntn. of E. Africa, discov. 1847, supposed one of the "mntns. of the Moon," in lat. 3°40' S., lon. 36° E., elev. 20,000 ft. (?)

KILISEH-KOI, a vill. of Asia Minor, Anatolia, on a lake 68 m. S. Brusa, and with many remains, supposed to be those of the anc. Ancyra.

KILKENNY, an inland co. of Ireland, Leinster, having N. Queen's co. E. the cos. Carlow and Wexford, S. and S.W. Waterford, and W. Tipperary. Area about 790 sq. m., or 508,811 ac., of which about 21,000 are uncultivated, & 18,600 in woods. Inhabited houses 29,090. Pop. 183,349. nearly all Roman Catholics. Surface slightly undulating, with a slope towards the S; several summits, however, rise to upwards of 1,000 feet in elevation. Chief rivers, the Nore, Barrow, & Snir. Soils various, but for the most part light fertile loams resting on limestone, gravel, &c., and presenting a much less proportion of bog than in most parts of Ireland. Climate drier & crops earlier than in the average of Irish cos. Agriculture improving. The usual corn crops form the chief object of the farmer, but dairy and sheep farms are also numerous. The breeds of stock are mostly native. Estates generally large; farms small. Average rent of land 17s. an acre; this being one of the highest rented cos. in Ireland. Anthracite coal abounds; fine black marble is also found. The manufs. of woollens and lineus, which long flourished here, have now materially declined. The principal export is grain. Two crossing lines of railway intersect this co.; and navigable rivers and the Grand canal furnish facilities for transport to all parts of Ireland. Annual value of land (1847) 357,752l.

Kilkenny is divided into 9 baronies and 127 par. in the dioceses of Ossory, Leighlin, and Cashel. It sends 3 mems. to H. of C., 2 for the co., and 1 for its chief town. Reg. electors for co. (1849) 481. It gives title of Earl to the Butler family.—Kilkenny, a city and parl. and municipal bor., cap. above co., and a co. of itself, on the Nore, here crossed by two handsome bridges, and on the Irish S.E. railway, 62 m. S.W. Dublin. It also communicates by a branch with the Great S. and W. railway. Area of city 921 ac.; do. of co. 17,012 ac. Pop. of city 19,071; of co. 23,625. Inhabited houses in do. 3,785. It is divided by the river into the Irish and English towns, and is, with the exception of suburbs, well built of stone; streets paved with black marble quarried in the vicinity. The principal thoroughfares run parallel to the river, along which and a canal, is a public walk termed the Mall. Chief buildings are the cathedral of St Canice or Kenny, and of the diocese of Ossory, a cruciform structure of the 14th century; the bishop's palace, chapter-house, deanery, a fine round tower, the churches of St John and St Mary, several Roman Catholic churches, one of which is the cathedral of a Roman Catholic bishop, fine ruins of a Franciscan friary, the co. court-ho., co. and city prisons, infirmary, fever hospital, union work-house, barracks, and a castle built by Strongbow, and now the residence of the Marquis of Ormonde. Public institutions comprise a college, or grammar school, several other public schools, a lunatic asylum, alms-houses, a library, and news-room. The woollen manuf., early introduced by the Butler family, is very much depressed, and the condition of the lower classes is wretched, though the city is the residence of many of the provincial gentry. It has some distilleries, tanneries, breweries, & flour mills, but the principal dependence of its inhabitants is on the retail trade. Corp. rev. (1833) about 2,000l. Kilkenny sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1849) 244. The town figures conspicuously in Irish history as the seat of parliaments, and the scene of many stirring events. (For a notice of the diocese see OSSORY.)

KIRGIZ COUNTRY or STEPPE, an extensive region of central Asia, embracing all the N. part of Turkestan between lat. 44° and 55° N., and lon. 53° and 82° E., partly independ., and partly comprised in the Russian govns. Orenburg and Tomsk, having E. the Chinese Empire, W. the Caspian Sea, and S. the khanats, khohan, Bokhara, and Khiva. Estimated area 1,533,000, and pop. 2,260,000 (Levchine). Surface traversed by many mountain chains, but it chiefly consists of barren plains, abounding in salt lakes, some upwards of 100 m. in length, and into which the principal rivers pour themselves. Climate remarkable for variability, and destructive hurricanes are frequent. The pop. is almost wholly nomadic, and rude in the extreme, their principal occupation being the rearing of sheep, goats, horses, and camels. Some land on river-banks, however, is roughly tilled, for millet, rye, and barley, especially in the S. or Kara-kalpack country; and seals, sturgeons, &c., are taken in the lakes. Some domestic weaving, and manufs. of hair cordage, soap, leather, and iron wares are carried on; but this region may be considered as pre-eminently the head quarters of barbarism in Asia, nearly all manufactured goods and necessities being derived from the adjacent countries in exchange for cattle, hides, horns, and wool. The Kirghiz are of the Mongol race, & separated into the so-named Great, Little, and Middle hordes, who are again subdivided into numerous tribes, each having its own khan or chief. Their religion is a compound of Islamism and idolatry. No towns exist in their territory, and the apparent remains of any such, or of temples, are certainly the vestiges of a previous race of inhabitants, much more advanced in civilization than the present occupants.

KIRIA, or KERREA, a town of Chinese Turkestan, 130 m. E.S.E. Khoten. Lat. 37° N.; lon. 82° 50' E. It has an active trade with Yarkand, to which it sends silk, gold-dust, and raisins; and caravans from the Russian frontier bring to it broad cloths, brocades, steel and furs, in exchange for tea, rhubarb & sal-ammoniac. Near it are gold mines wrought by the Chinese government.

KIRILOV, a town of Russia, gov. and 265 m. E.N.E. Novgorod. Pop. 2,163. It is surrounded by lakes, and owes its name to a remarkable

It gives the title of Earl to the Duke of Hamilton. Gavin Hamilton the painter was born here.—New Lanark is a vill. in the above pa., on the Clyde, here crossed by a bridge, 1 m. S. Lanark. Pop. 1,642, employed in extensive cotton works, founded by the philanthropic David Dale in 1784; and the regulations in which, as respects hours of labour, cleanliness, morals, and education, have excited universal admiration. Robert Owen's first attempts to establish a new system of social organization were made here.

LANARKSHIRE, or CLYDESDALE, an inland co. of Scotland, having N. the cos. Dumbarton and Stirling, E. Linlithgow, Edinburghshire, and Peebles, S. Dumfries, and W. the cos. Ayr and Renfrew. Estim. area 945 sq. m., or 604,880 ac., more than one third part of which is arable. Inhab. houses 81,458. Pop. 426,972. It consists of the whole upper basin of the Clyde, and its affs., along which, and in the level or N. parts, are some fine agricultural tracts; the "middle ward" of the co. is undulating; and the "upper ward" or S. part mtnous. and sterile, one summit rising to 3,100 feet, and several others to between 2,500 and 3,000 ft. above the sea. Chief crops oats, barley, wheat, turnips, and potatoes. In the middle ward orchards are numerous. Pastures are extensive in the uplands. The breed of draught horses is amongst the best in Scotl. Agriculture greatly advanced of late; estates mostly large; farms of all sizes, and farm buildings of the best class. Average rent of land in 1810, 9*s*. 10*d*. per acre. Annual value of land (1843) 341,121*l*.; of mines 58,303*l*.; of all assessed property 1,834,998*l*. The coal, iron, and lead mines of this co. have rendered it one of the most wealthy in Britain. In Old Monkland, especially, there are extensive iron works, and all kinds of manufs. are carried on in and around Glasgow in the lower ward, besides which city, the county comprises the towns Lanark, Hamilton, Airdrie, Kilbride, Carlisle, Douglas, and Biggar. It sends one mem. to H. of C., besides 2 for Glasgow, and 1 for other contrib. bors. Reg. electors for co. (1848) 3,732.

LANCASHIRE, a marit. and palatine co. of Engl., having N. Cumberland and Westmoreland, E. Yorkshire, S. Cheshire, and W. the Irish Sea, an arm of which running up into co. Westmoreland, divides it into two unequal parts. Area 1,806 sq. m., or 1,155,840 ac., of which about 850,000, estimated to be grass and arable. Inhabited houses 289,184. Pop. (1831), 1,336,854, do. (1841), 1,667,054, about 200,000 of whom are of Irish descent. Surface rugged and mountainous in the N., where Coniston Fell rises to 2,577 feet above the sea, and on the E. border, where the long ridge, popularly called "The Backbone of England," separates the co. from York; elsewhere generally level. Often deficient in trees, and in a few parts containing extensive bogs or mosses. Principal rivers, the Duddon, Lune, Wyre, Ribble, Mersey, and Irwell. Besides Coniston Lake, Windermere is partly in this co. Climate mild, but one of the most humid in England. Carboniferous sandstone and new red sandstone, with limestone, form the strata of the co. Soil among the hills moorish or peaty, in the lower district mostly a tolerably fertile sandy loam. Agriculture comparatively backward. Potatoes more extensively grown than in any other English co. Dairy and hay farms more numerous than arable. Horticulture is pursued on a large scale near the towns. Estates, with some exceptions, small. Tillage farms rather small, and held on short leases. Average rent of land 22*s*. 5*d*. an ac. Ann. value of land (1842-3) 1,636,416*l*. The most important mineral is coal, to the abundance of which the co. mainly owes its manufacturing eminence. The Lancashire coalfield is estimated to extend over nearly 400 sq. m. Copper is also raised in the N. of the co. Value of mines (1842), 346,007*l*. For some notice of the immense cotton, and other manufs. of this co., which are doubtless the most extensive and important on the globe, and for the vast commerce which, notwithstanding the inferior character of the harbours, these manufs. create, see the articles on its chief towns, Manchester, Preston, Bolton, Oldham, Wigan, Bury, Clitheroe, Ashton, Warrington, Rochdale, Blackburn, Chorley, Lancaster, and Liverpool. Numerous railways connect these towns with the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire, and all other parts of England and Scotland, as do the Bridgewater, Leeds, and Liverpool, and numerous other canals. In 1838, the cotton mills of this co. employed 201,573 hands, woolen mills 7,971 do., flax mills 2,541 do., and silk mills 8,367 do., in all, employing 220,792 individuals, independently of printers, bleachers, and other artisans engaged in a subsidiary manner, in the production of woven goods. Within the last century, the pop. has augmented at a rate of 800 per cent., the increase in the agricultural cos. having been but 84 per cent. Total value of assessed property (1843) 7,756,228*l*. The co. is divided into 770 pas., and was formerly included in the diocese of Chester, but Manchester has been lately made a bishop's see. It sends 26 members to House of Commons, 4 for the co. and 22 for its cities and towns. Registered electors for co. (1848) for N. division 10,710, for S. division 24,179. Lancaster and shire was erected into a duchy and co. palatine, or separate sovereignty, in the reign of Edward III., in favour of his son, John of Gaunt, the progenitor of the Lancastrian sovereigns. In the time of Edward IV., it was re-annexed to the crown. The duchy has many estates in other parts of Engl., and a court of chancery, with a rev., in 1840, of nearly 35,000*l*., expenditure 30,346*l*. . .

Here are also a civic school, opened in 1834, several superior, and many free and primary schools, a public library with 70,000 volumes, and various scientific collections, orphan, deaf and dumb, and lunatic asylums, and a house of correction. Leipzig, is the grand emporium of the book trade of Germany. In 1837, the catalogue of its Easter fair announced 4,353 new works, and that of its Michaelmas fair 3,538 do. At the former, about 600 booksellers assemble to settle their annual accounts, and the new year and Michaelmas fairs are attended by a vast concourse of people from most countries of Europe and W. Asia; a large wool market is also held here in May. Leipzig has extensive manufs. of silk and half silken fabrics, hosiery, leather, oil-cloths, playing-cards, tobacco, gold and silver articles, snuff, chocolate, starch, soap, liquors, and musical instruments, with numerous printing, engraving, dyeing, and wool-spinning establishments. It communicates by railway with Dresden, Berlin, Magdeburg, Halle, Wiemar, and Zwickau. Near the end of the 10th century, Leipzig was merely a small Slavonian vill.; in the 12th century it was fortified, and many sanguinary engagements have since taken place in its environs, the most memorable of which was fought on 16th-18th Oct. 1813, when the French, under Napoleon, were totally defeated by the allies.

LEITH, a parl. bor. and seaport town of Scotland, co. and 2 m. N.E. of Edinburgh, on the river or Water of Leith, where it enters the Firth of Forth. Lat. of fort 55° 58' 9" N., lon. 3° 10' 5" W. Area of pas. 1,490 ac. Pop. of do. (1801) 15,272; do. of parl. dist. (1841) 35,688; do. of town 26,626. The town of Leith communicates with, and its houses almost join to those of, Edinburgh by means of Leith Walk. It also communicates by the Edinburgh and Leith railway. The town is situated on low lying ground adjoining the Firth, and consists of one old narrow street in the centre, with numerous lanes on each side, and some newer and more spacious streets forming the continuation of Leith Walk, on the E., to which, adjoin the links or meadows. Chief buildings, the royal exchange, town-hall, custom house, several banks, jail, Trinity house or Mariners' hospital, and Seafield baths. Leith anciently consisted of two parishes; South Leith, originally Restalrig, and extending to, and comprehending part of the Calton of Edinburgh, with an ancient church, a high school, and endowed Bell's school; and North Leith, comprehending also a portion of the West Church parish of Edinburgh. Here there is a large modern church, there are besides two quoad sacra pas., St Johns and St Thomas. Leith fort, 1½ m. W. of the custom house, is a commodious artillery station. The harbour has by successive erections been extended upwards of a mile into the Firth, and is still (1849) undergoing further extension and deepening, so as to range from 15 feet to 20 feet. There are two wet-docks, each 250 yards in length & 100 yards in breadth, with basin of 10 acres extent, capable of containing 150 vessels; also adjoining to these, three dry-docks, each 136 feet long. Across the Water of Leith are two draw-bridges and a stone bridge. Amount of shipping belonging to Leith (1844) 210; aggregate tonnage 25,427 tons.

Average customs revenue (1844 to 1849) 62,800l. The chief commerce of Leith consists in its colonial and foreign trade and imports of grain. Its manufactures are unimportant, and consist chiefly of paint and colour works, glass works (now declined), sugar refining, preserving meats, and iron foundries. Until 1832, when it was erected into a parliamentary burgh, Leith was dependent upon, and governed by the city of Edinburgh, to which it formed the port. In early times its prosperity, then considerable, was often checked by warlike conflicts; in 1541, the town was burnt by an English fleet; in 1549, it was taken possession of by the French troops, who came to the assistance of Mary of Guise. Cromwell repaired its fortifications. It is now governed by a provost, 4 bailies, and 10 councillors. Along with Portobello and Musselburgh, it sends one member to House of Commons. LIBERIA, an independent Negro republic of W. Africa, established 1823, extends along the coast of Guinea, between Sierra Leone and Cape Mesurado for 320 m., with an average breadth of 80 m. Pop. estimated at 80,000 coloured persons, of whom 10,000 are free blacks from the U. States, and the remainder aborigines, or captives released from slavers. The country has been all purchased from time to time by the American Colonization Society; and its climate has improved greatly by a systematic drainage, and clearance of woods. Palm oil, to the value of 150,000 dolls., was shipped from it in 1847; camwood, ivory, gold-dust, coffee, indigo, ginger, and arrow-root, are other principal products. Cocoa and sugar thrive, and it is expected that cotton will soon become an article of export. No draught animals succeed, and much of the camwood exported is brought 200 m. from the interior on mens' backs. It is estimated that 2 million inhabs. of the interior now obtain supplies of European goods from this republic and Cape Palmas. In 1847, 82 foreign vessels visited the coast, and brought away merchandise to the value of 600,000 dollars. Liberia, formerly a dependency of the U. LILLE, or LISLE (Flem. Ryssel), a comm. and strongly fortified and manufacturing city of France, cap. dep. Nord, on the Deule, a canal connecting the Scarpe and Lys rivers, 26 m. N.N.E. Arras. Lat. 50° 38' N., lon. 3° 2' W. Pop. (1846) 67,768. It is entered by seven gates, and has a strong citadel, with barracks and magazines on its N.W. side; it is pretty well laid out, having many straight and wide streets, lined with substantial brick houses, a Grande Place of noble extent, and about 20 other squares; but its quarters inhabited by the manufacturing pop. are narrow, dirty, and unhealthy, and its artisans are in the most impoverished condition. Principal public buildings, the town hall, formerly a palace of the Dukes of Burgundy, and inhabited in the 16th century by Charles v., now comprising the chief municipal offices; the public library and museums, several Roman Catholic churches, with fine paintings; the Protestant church, synagogue, and prefecture; 5 large hospitals, several extensive barracks, the prisons, exchange, mint, theatre, concert hall, and large corn storehouses; and among its public establishments are a valuable picture gallery, academy of music, architecture, and a botanic garden. The canal, on which the town is built, has several branches navigable by small vessels, and along one part of it, called the middle Deule, is a fine esplanade, close to which is the handsome Pont Royal. Lille derives high importance from being one of the chief seats of the French thread and cotton manufs. Calicoes, cotton handkerchiefs, printed goods, table linen, fine linen cloths, thread, lace, stockings, and gloves, are its principal products; in cotton-spinning it also rivals some of the towns of Lancashire; and it has considerable manufs. of broad cloths, kerseymeres, serges, and other worsted stuffs, velvets, hats, paper, beet-root-sugar, and mineral acids, with government tobacco and gunpowder factories, and an extensive fabrication of gold coin. Its vicinity is studded with bleaching-grounds, rapeseed-oil mills, & beet-root plantations, the two latter of which are very important, employing many hundreds of the inhabitants. A railway connects Lille with Brussels and Ghent, through Courtrai, Roubaix, and Turcoing, all industrial towns of importance. Lille, which successively belonged to the counts of Flanders, kings of France, and Earls of Burgundy, was finally annexed to the crown of France by Louis xiv. in 1667. It was taken, after a three months' siege, by the allies under the Duke of Marlborough & Prince Eugène in 1708, and was bombarded by the Austrians in 1792.

LIMA, the cap. city of Peru, in a fine valley, about 6 m. from its port Callao, on the Pacific, and connected with it by a noble road. Lat. 12° 2' 55" S., lon. 77° 5' 30" W. Pop. (1838) 45,000; according to a census, 54,098, including suburbs. Mean temp. of year 73° .3; winter 68° .1; summer 77° .6 Fahr. It is about 2 m. in length by 1¼ m. in greatest breadth, and separated from a suburb by the Rimac, here crossed by a fine stone bridge, & elsewhere enclosed by a bastioned wall, entered by 6 gates. Its numerous domes & spires give it a magnificent appearance, and it is regularly laid out. Through most of the streets flows a stream. Houses flat-roofed, built of sun-dried bricks, around court yards, and seldom of more than one story. Principal edifices, comprise the cathedral church, parish church, archbishop's palace, now partly occupied by the Peruvian senate, the former residence of the viceroy, now the court house, the city hall, jail, all in the principal square, which has in its centre a bronze fountain and statue of Fame. Lima has numerous richly-decorated churches, a convent, dedicated to San Francisco, and of great extent and wealth; 2 foundling asylums, 11 public hospitals, a university, with a handsome edifice, partly appropriated to the meetings of the N. Peruvian chamber of representatives, a national museum, a public library with rare books, a public museum, ecclesiastical, Lancasterian, naval, and other schools, a handsome theatre, a large bull-ring, a cockpit; & outside of the walls, a planted promenade, a public cemetery, and public baths. It has some manufs. of gold lace, and a glass factory. Its vicinity is fertile, and produces large quantities of provisions and live stock. Climate pleasant, and reputed healthy; but the mortality is high, partly owing perhaps to great neglect of drainage and disposal of refuse. It was long the grand commercial entrepôt for all the W. coast of S. America, and it still has a large trade, its exports consisting of silver, copper ore, bark, soap, vicuna wool, chinchilla skins, nitre, sugar, &c.; and imports of manufactured goods from England, wines, silks, and brandy, from Spain & France, and other produce chiefly from the American continent.

LINCOLNSHIRE, a large marit. co. of England, extending along its E. coast from the Wash to the Humber, which separates it from Yorkshire; it has E. the North Sea, S. cos. Cambridge, Northampton, and Rutland; and W. Leicester, Notts, and York. Area 2,611 sq. m., or 1,671,040 ac., of which nearly 1,500,000 are said to be cultivated, and about 470,000 are enclosed fen-land. Inhab. houses 72,964. Pop. 362,602. It is naturally divided into 3 districts:—1. the wolds, a low range of hills in the N.E.; 2. the moors, a lower, but more extensive division, running N. and S., and now mostly cultivated; 3. the fens, in the S. and E., a low tract protected from the sea by embankments, which, as the shoaling of the water is very gradual (the tide often running out more than 2 m.), might in places be extended so as to gain vast tracts of new land. Chief rivers, the Trent, Welland, Witham, and Ancholme. Climate in the fens moist, and previous to the extensive drainage now effected, very productive of ague. Soil mostly a fertile sandy loam, on the moors and wolds; in the fens, deep loam, rich marly clay, or peat. Improvements in agriculture, especially as regards draining, irrigation, & bone manuring, have rendered this one of the most productive English cos. Chief crops, oats, especially on the moors and wolds, wheat, beans, barley, hemp, woad, rape, turnips, and artificial grasses; but the pasture land greatly exceeds the arable in extent. That of the fens is unequalled elsewhere in quality. The cattle, mostly short-horned, attain a great weight. The sheep are also famous for size and for long wool. Many horses are bred; the waste fens support vast flocks of geese, chiefly kept for their feathers, and the waters are the resort of wild ducks. Estates and farms of all sizes. Average rent of land, estimated in 1840, about 21s. an acre. Total annual value of land (1843), 2,340,624l., of all assessed property 2,868,330l. Lincoln is separated into the parts of Lindsey in the N., Kesteven S.W., and Holland S.E., and into 33 hundreds, & 629 pas., in the Midland circuit and diocese of Lincoln, besides which city, it contains Boston, Grantham, Stamford, and Great Grimsby. The co. sends 4 membs. to H. of C., 2 of which are for the N., & 2 for the S. division. Reg. co. electors (1848) of N. div., 11,398; of S. div., 9,163. This co. is famous for the number and beauty of its ancient parish churches.

LIVERPOOL, a parl. and munic. bor., and next to London, the principal seaport of England, co. Lancaster, hundred W. Derby, on the E. bank of the Mersey estuary, about 4 m. from the Irish Sea, 31½ m. W.S.W. Manchester, and 210½ m. N.W. London. Lat. of St Paul's Church, 53° 24' 6" N., lon. 2° 59' 5" W. Area of borough, comprising, with Liverpool pa., portions of the townships of Kirkdale, Everton, W. Derby, and the extra parochial place of Toxteth Park, 5,000 ac. Pop. (1831) 205,964; (1841) 286,487; (1846) 358,655. Mean temp. of year, 50° .8; winter 41° .3, summer 61° .1 Fahr. It extends 5 m. in length, by about 2½ m. at its greatest breadth over gently rising ground; the highest point within the borough, being about 220 ft. above the quay wall of the river. Though very irregularly laid out, it has many broad, straight, and handsome thoroughfares; & its streets are receiving great embellishment in point of architecture. Along the shore, there is a line of docks & basins of nearly five miles in extent, having, in 1848, an aggregate water area and quay space of 195 ac. 524 yards, & 14 m. 119 yards in length of space round them. Among the largest of the docks are the Brunswick, Queen's, King's, Albert, Salthouse, Canning, George's, Prince's, Waterloo, Victoria, Trafalgar, Clarence, Nelson, Bramley-moore, Wellington, Sandon, Salisbury, Collingwood, & Stanley. The three last are connected with the Leeds and Liverpool canal, and most of the others have half tide locks and wet basins. Notwithstanding this enormous dock accommodation, the exigencies of the traffic daily demand more, & an extension of the line of docks for about 1½ m. N.wards, is now being made. The number of ships that entered the port in 1849 was 20,783; the tonnage 3,639,146; the revenue 224,224l., after a reduction of 38½ per cent. from the rates of 1836—33 per cent. from those of 1844, on the tonnage dues on East India voyages, or 18 per cent. on the aggregate foreign dues—and again a further reduction in 1848, equal to 40,000l. on the gross income. The rapid increase of the commerce of the port, is seen by contrasting the extent of dock-room, and the amount of shipping, tonnage, and revenue, above stated, with the corresponding items in 1836, when they were as follows:—Area 111 acres, shipping 12,537, tonnage 1,592,436, revenue 183,455l. Warehouse room attached to the docks is wanting, and most of the imported goods have to be placed in private warehouses. The London and North Western railway has a terminus on the high ground of the town at Edge-hill, and from thence 3 branches through tunnels run, one to the centre of the town for general traffic, and one to the North & South docks respectively for goods. The East Lancashire, the Lancashire and Yorkshire, and the Liverpool and Southport lines join, and have a goods station near the docks in Great Howard Street, & a general station in Tithe-barn Street, near the exchange. Liverpool is supplied with water pumped from wells in the red sandstone, into head reservoirs, from which it is distributed with such pressure that fires are extinguished by jets direct from the mains, without the intervention of fire-engines. The water is of fine quality, but deficient in quantity. Gas is supplied by a chartered company, and is introduced into most of the houses. The sewerage of the town was, until lately, extremely defective, & the paving and cleansing were not properly attended to; in some localities, too, the population lived chiefly in cellars, or in crowded courts. Owing to these causes, & to the influx of a vagrant Irish, the mortality of the town was very high. Under a local act obtained in 1846, active measures have been taken to remedy these evils. Sewers are being made in all directions, and houses drained. The cellars have been emptied of their inhabitants, and 6,000 of them shut up. Attention has been given to the paving of the streets, and to their proper cleansing.

Among the public buildings is the town hall, erected at a cost of upwards of 110,000l. It contains a superb suite of entertainment rooms, the council-hall, and various public offices, connected with the management of the municipal business, and the corporate estate. On the landing of the grand staircase, is a fine statue of Canning by Chantrey. The hall stands on one side of a square, the other 3 sides of which are formed by the exchange buildings, a noble pile, the lower story of which is an arcaded walk. In the centre of the quadrangle is a statue of Nelson, surrounded by emblematical bronze figures. The custom-house, comprising also the excise, post, dock, & stamp offices, is an enormously large heavy building, of the Ionic order, covering an area of 6,700 sq. yards. In the area opposite its north front is a bronze statue of Huskisson. A beautiful structure is in progress (1849), intended to contain the assize courts and a hall for music, to be called St George's. It is of the Corinthian order, externally and internally. A new concert hall has also been completed, of colossal dimensions, and in excellence in the requisites of hearing and seeing, may vie with any building of a similar kind. The principal churches are those of Saints Peter, Catherine, James, Michael, Luke, Philip, & Paul; and St George's, the Scotch kirk, Free churches, Unitarian, Independent, & Wesleyan chapels, altogether 109 churches and chapels. Among the educational establishments are the Liverpool Royal Institution, which has a large library, and a museum inferior only to those of the metropolis, the Collegiate, a fine building in the Gothic style; the Mechanics' Institute; a school of medicine, and several schools belonging to the different religious bodies. There are many hospitals, an infirmary, dispensaries, and charitable institutions; four large covered, and two open, public markets for provisions, a fish market and pedlars' market; corn exchange, and tobacco warehouse. A new jail, 2 m. out of town, is in course of erection, to supersede that within the borough. There are public baths on the pier-head, and 2 other baths & wash-houses in the town for the working classes, the first of the kind erected.

Another extensive building, containing wash-houses and baths for the working classes, is in progress, and sites have been secured for four additional establishments. The bank of England has a branch here, and next to it is the Liverpool Commercial Bank, both fine buildings, near the exchange. There are ten other banks. There are fourteen newspapers published in Liverpool. The town has some extensive sugar refineries, iron and brass foundries, breweries, rope, glass, soda, & alkali works; a large manuf. of watches & jewellery; and ship-building is carried on in it to a great extent, but it owes its chief importance to its being a great seat of foreign export and import trade, and the main outlet for the manufs. of Manchester, W. Yorkshire, Staffordshire, and the principal part of the trade of England with Ireland & America. The entrance of the Mersey is encumbered with shoals, but at high water it may be entered by the largest ships. Nearly all the raw cotton imported into Britain, is brought to Liverpool; the imports in 1846, amounted to 1,134,081 bales; exports of British & Irish produce in 1845, amounted in value to 28,427,767*l.* (those of London in the same year amounting to no more than 11,078,164*l.*) Customs rev. in same year amounted in Liverpool to 3,434,521*l.*, more than double that of London. Customs revenue (1846) 3,622,056*l.* Reg. shipping (1847) 1,466 vessels, aggregate burden 387,535 tons. Liverpool is connected by railway and canals with all the great towns of England, and by steam packets with Glasgow, Dublin, Cork, Bristol, London, and the principal ports of America to which mail steamers depart. The bor. is divided into 16 wards, and governed by a mayor, a recorder, 16 aldermen, and 48 councillors. The corp. rev. from town dues alone amounted, in 1836, to 49,332*l.*, and in 1849, to 102,596*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* With this and other sources of income, the council are enabled to meet their ordinary and obligatory expenses, imposed under the municipal act, and from 1836 to 1849, there has been an annual surplus varying from 20,000*l.* to 40,000*l.* The corp. estate is estimated at above 4,000,000*l.*, and the debt about 550,000*l.* It has quarter and petty sessions, courts of record and requests, and is the seat of assizes for the hundred of W. Derby. Its port jurisdiction comprises the whole estuary of the Mersey. It sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 15,559.

LOIR, Lidéricus, a river of France, rises in the lagoon of Cernay, dep. Eure-et-Loir, flows past Châteaudun, Vendôme, Châtean-du-Loir, and Durtal, and joins the Sarthe on the left, 5 m. N. Angers. Length 150 miles.

LOIR-ET-CHEER, a dep. in the N.W. of France, formed of part of the old prov. of Orleanais, surrounded by the deps. Eure-et-Loir, Sarthe, Indre-et-Loire, Indre, Cher, and Loiret. Area 2,363 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 256,833. Surface level, and having numerous etangs (lagoons). It is situated in the basin of the Loire, and watered by many of its affs. Soil generally fertile, except in the S.; climate mild. Agriculture forms the chief occupation of the pop. Chief products, grain, wine, hemp, and fruits. The wines are in general of good quality, the best are those of the Cher. Sheep are numerous, and of good breeds; horses are excellent. The rearing of bees and fowls is an important branch of rural industry; that of silk worms is inconsiderable. The most valuable mineral product is that of flint. There are mineral springs at St. Denis and Vieuvy-le-Rayé, and valuable fishings in the lagoons. Manufs. comprise leather, glass, woollen cloths, cottons, beet-root sugar, paper and gloves. The dep. is divided into the 3 arronds. of Blois, Romarantin, and Vendôme.

LOIRE, Liger, an important river of Europe, & the largest in France, rises in Mont Gerbier-de-Jones, dep. Ardèche, at an elev. of 3,940 feet, flows N.N.W., and W. past Roanne, Nevers, La Charité, Cosne, Gien, Orleans, Beaugency, Blois, Amboise, Tours, Saumur, Ancenis, Nantes, and Paimbœuf, and enters the Bay of Biscay by a wide estuary below St. Nazaire, dep. Loire-Inf. Length 530 m.; principal affs. on the right, the Lignon, Semène, Furend, Coise, Rahuus, Sornin, Reonce, Arroux, Aron, Nièvre, Ceze, Anthion, and Maine; on the left, the Borne, Ance, Lignon, Aix, Bèbre, Acolin, Allier, Loiret, and Cosson. It is navigable in descending from la Noirie, and in ascending to Roanne, dep. Loire. The tide is perceptible as far as Nantes. Its course is generally rapid, and navigation is interrupted during 5 or 6 months in the year, from want of water, overflowing, or freezing. Dykes and barrages have been constructed along a great part of its course, many of which were destroyed by a great flood in 1846. Vessels of upwards of 300 tons discharge at Paimbœuf. The Loire is connected by canals with the Soône, Seine, and Vilaine. There is steam communication between Moulins and Nantes, by means of the Allier and Loire.

LOIRE, a dep. of the S.E. of France, formed of the old prov. of Lyonnais, and situated between the deps. Rhône, Saône-et-Loire, Allier, Puy-de-Dôme, H. Loire, Ardèche and Isère; cap. Montbrison. Area 1,921 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 453,786. Surface generally elev. and mntnons.; traversed in the S.E. by the mntns. of the Cevennes, and partly enclosed between them and the mntns. of Forez. The greater portion of the dep. is situated in the basin of the Loire, and watered by its affs., the Ondène, Furend, Lignon, and Soruiz; the Rhone forms its limit in the S.E. Climate variable, but healthy. Soil generally infertile; corn raised insufficient for home consumption; potatoes and hemp are important crops, and the chestnuts of Lyon are celebrated. Wines are generally of good quality, the best are those of the valley of the Rhone. Silk worms are extensively reared, especially in the vicinity of Bourg-Argental, where is produced the finest silk in France for the manuf. of blondes. From the inexhaustible richness of its coal basin, this is one of the most important mining deps. in the country; the other mineral products are iron, marble, granite, porphyry, & flint. There are numerous mineral springs, the best frequented of which are St. Alban, Sail-sous-Conzan, and St. Galmier. The manufs. of this dep. are among the most celebrated and extensive in France; the 2 chief branches are silk and ribbons, the principal seats of which are at St. Chamond and St. Etienne, and iron and steel goods, of which St. Etienne is the centre. The next important manufs. are those of flint glass and bottles, laces, cottons and muslins, common cloths, paper and leather. Boat-building is carried on to a considerable extent at Roanne and St. Rambert. The dep. has 3 lines of railway connecting the principal towns with Lyon, and it is divided into the arronds. Montbrison, Roanne, and St. Etienne.

LOIRE, a comm. & vill. of France, dep. Rhône, arrond. and 14 m. S. Lyon. Pop. 1,450.

LOIRE (HAUTE), a dep. of the S.E. of France, formed of part of the old prov. of Languedoc, and situated between the deps. Loire, Puy-de-Dôme, Cantal, Lozere, and Ardèche; cap. Le Puy. Area 1,920 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 307,161. Surface elev. and mntnons., traversed on the E. by the Cevennes, and on the W. by the mntns. of Margerides, which unite the Cevennes with the mountains of Auvergne, and on the S. by the Forez mntns. Many of these are volcanic; culminating point, Mont Mezin, in the Cevennes, 5,794 feet. The dep. is entirely situated in the basin of the Loire, by which, and by its affl. the Allier, & numerous smaller streams, it is watered. Climate rigorous in the mntn. dists. Soil poor, sterile on the slopes of the mntns. Agriculture in a very backward state; corn and potatoes sufficient for home consumption. Wine is raised in small quantity and of inferior quality. Cattle rearing is an important branch of industry; hees are numerous in some localities, and furnish excellent honey, and silk worms are extensively reared. Chief mineral products, coal, antimony, gypsum, building stone, and potter's clay. Manufs. are unimportant, the chief are lace, silk, ribbons, paper, and leather. From the want of employment, a great portion of the pop. leave the dep. during a considerable part of the year. The dep. is div. into the arronds. Brioude, Le Puy, & Yssengeaux.

LOIRE-INFÉRIEURE, a maritime dep. in the N.W. of France, formed of part of the old prov. Bretagne, situated on the Atlantic Ocean and the Bay of Biscay, between the deps. Morbihan, Ille-et-Vilaine, Mayenne, Maine-et-Loire, & Vendée; cap. Nantes. Area 2,735 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 517,268. Surface in general level, traversed by low hills, and mostly situated in the basin of the Loire, and its estuary. Chief rivers, the Loire, Vilaine, Erdre, Brivé, Sevre-Nantaise, Moine, Maine, Acheneau, and Ognon. This dep. contains numerous lagoons, among which the étang de Grand-Lieu is the largest in France. Climate humid, but healthy. Soil generally fertile. Agriculture in an advanced state; chief products, grain and wines, the latter are nearly all pale, and are of second class quality. Cattle are extensively reared, horses excellent, & sheep of good breeds: bees are numerous. Chief mineral products, marine salt, turf, coal, and iron. Nantes is the principal port. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Ancenis, Châteaubriant, Nantes, Paimbœuf, and Savenay.

LOIRET, *Ligerula, a river of France, dep. Loiret, rises in 2 springs, 2 m. S.S.E. Orleans, and joins the Loire on the left near Orleans; length 10 m.

LOINER, a dep. of the N.W. of France, forming part of the old prov. Orleanais, situated betw. the depts. Seine-et-Oise, Eure-et-Loire, Loir-et-Cher, Cher, Nièvre, Yonne, and Seine-et-Marne; cap. Orleans. Area 2,645 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 331,633. Surface flat and little elevated. The N. portion is situated in the basin of the Seine, and watered by its affls., the Loing and Essonne, and in the S. it is traversed by the Loire, and watered by its affls., the Loiret, Cosson, and Beuvron. There are several lagoons in the basin of the Loing. Climate mild and healthy, except near the lagoons. Soil rich and fertile N. of the Loire, but poor on the S. of that river. Chief products, grain, wine, saffron, lint, and timber. Apples for cyder are extensively grown. Wine mostly red, and of good quality. Sheep and cattle are numerous, and of good breeds; fowls and bees abundant. Mineral products comprise only building stones and potter's clay. There are mineral springs at Segray and Beaugency, the former of which has a bath establishment. The important manufs., of which Orleans was formerly the seat, have greatly declined; the chief are cloths and woollen caps, pottery, cotton thread, leather, beet-root sugar, and paper. The dep. is divided into the arronds. of Giën, Montargis, Orleans, and Pithiviers.

LOMBARDO-VENETIAN KINGDOM (Germ. Lombardisch Venetianisches Königreich, Ital. Regno Lombardo Veneto), a political and administrative division of the Austrian empire in Italy, forming 2 governments.—I. Lombardy, divided into the delegs. Milan, Brescia, Cremona, Mantua, Bergamo, Como, Pavia, Lodi, and Sondrio, cap. Milan.—II. Venice, with the delegs. Venice, Verona, Udine, Padua, Vicenza, Treviso, Rovigo, and Belluno. It is composed of a vast plain inclined to the S.W., and situated entirely in the basin of the Adriatic, between lat. 44° 47' 10" & 46° 40' 25" N., and lon. 8° 33' and 13° 43' E., bounded E. by the Adriatic and Illyria, S. by the Pontif. Sta., Modena, and Parma, S.W. and W. by Piedmont, N. by Switzerland and the Tyrol. Area 17,511 sq. m. Pop. (1842) 4,803,289. The territory is enclosed on the N. by the Rhetian, Noric, Carnic and Julian Alps, from which several extensive valleys depend. The mountains Euganei and Berici, in the gov. Venice, form 2 masses of little extent, nearly isolated in the plain. The rest of the territory is composed of low plains, which terminate in lagoons, on the shores of the Adriatic. The principal rivers are the Po and its affls., all of which flow to the Adriatic. 29 of these are navigable, and many of them are connected by means of canals. All the fine lakes of northern Italy belong wholly, or in part, to the Lombardo-Venetian government; the Lago Maggiore forms its W. boundary. Climate severe in the mtn. regions, but none of the mtns. rise to the snow line; otherwise it is temperate and healthy, except near the lagoons and in the vicinity of the rice fields. Mean temp. of year at Milan 55°.2; at Venice 55°.4; it is often, however, severe in winter, and the lagoons of Venice are sometimes frozen over; rain falls often and copiously in summer and autumn; average annual amount 35 inches, but at Tolmezzo, on the Tagliamento, the average fall is 100 inches. The prevailing winds are N.N.W. and N.E. in the gov. Venice, and E., W. and N.E. in the gov. Milan. The soil, in the plains, composed of rich alluvium, and abounding in marine deposits, is almost everywhere extremely fertile: it is cultivated with great care, and the system of artificial irrigation is the most complete in Europe. The provs. of Lombardy and Venice are the most fertile in the Austrian empire. Principal products, maize, wheat, oats, rye, and barley. The number of cattle (1845) was, in the prov. Milan, 407,890, and in Venice 369,782; in the deleg. Lodi the finest Parmesan, and in Milan the best Strachino, cheese is made. Wine is an important product, but its quality is generally inferior. Hemp and flax, of excellent quality, are extensively grown. Minerals comprise copper, iron, lead, arsenic, marble, alabaster, potter's clay, coal, and precious stones. The principal mineral springs are those of Bormio, Massino, & Trescorre, in the gov. Milan; and Albano, Rovere, Recoaro, and Piano, in the gov. Venice. The principal manufs. are silks, cheese, cloths, printed cottons, paper, glass, and pottery ware. The principal seats of commerce are Venice, Milan, Brescia, Bergamo, Padua, and Verona. Commerce is facilitated by means of excellent roads, including those leading over the Splügen and Valteline, & by navigation on the lakes, rivs., and canals. The only railways in operation are the great line from Milan to Venice (partly completed), and the short lines from Milan to Monza N.W., and Milan to Treviglio. The population belong chiefly to the Italia-Tuscan family, with a mixture of Germans and Jews.

Roman Catholicism is the religion of the state. The chief educational establishments are the universities of Pavia and Padua; 12 colleges (Liceo), 43 gymnasias, & numerous other schools. The royal imperial institute of Milan has sections at Vienna, Padua, and Verona, and there are 24 public libraries in the state. The kingdom is divided into the archbishoprics of Milan and Venice, and 18 bishoprics; it has 37 monasteries and 34 nunneries, and numerous hospitals and charitable institutions. The Lombardo-Venetian kingdom was formed in 1814, of part of the kingdom of Italy, created by Napoleon. The congress of Vienna recognised it as a possession of the Austrian empire, and granted to Austria the power of maintaining garrisons in Ferrara & Comacchio, beyond its southern frontier. [AUSTRIA.]

LOMBARDY, an old div. of Italy, so named from its having long been the chief seat of the Lombards, or Langobards. It now forms the W. part of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, the E. part of Piedmont, and the duchies of Parma and Modena.

LOMBERS, a comm. and vill. of France (formerly a town), dep. Tarn, arrond. Albi. P. 1,700.

LOMBLEM, an isl. of the Malay Archipelago, E. of Flores, between Solor and Pantar. Lat. about 8° 20' S., lon. 123° 40' E. Length N. to S. about 40 m.; greatest breadth 16 m.

LOMBOK, an isl. of the Malay Archipelago, between lat. 8° 12' and 9° 1' S., and lon. 115° 44' & 116° 40' E., separated from Sumbawa, E. by the Strait of Allas, and W. from Bali by the Strait of Lombok. Estimated area 1,480 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 250,000 (?). Two mntn. chains extend along the N. and S. coasts, in the former of which is a volcanic peak, 12,379 feet in elevation. Between them is a well watered plain, wholly cultivated for rice, the hill-sides producing coffee & maize. Exports about 20,000 tons of rice annually. The principal port, Ampanam, on its W. coast, is more resorted to than any other in the E. seas (except Singapore), by European shipping and American whalers, for provisions. Other principal towns are Mataram, the cap., & Lalm-Hadje on the E. coast.

LOMELLO, a mkt. town of Piedmont, div. and 25 m. S.S.E. Novara. Pop. 2,151.

LOMOND (Lochn), the largest lake of Scotland, between cos. Stirling and Dumbarton, 6 m. N. Dumbarton, and 16 m. N.W. Glasgow. Length N. to S. nearly 21 m.; greatest breadth 7 to 8 m.; narrowing to 1 m. at N. end. Area 40 sq. m. Depth from 10 to 60 fathoms. It is studded with 30 isls., some of which are finely wooded, and it is surrounded by mtns. and valleys, displaying striking scenes of grandeur and beauty. It receives the Endrick, Luss, Fruin, & other streams, and discharges its superfluous waters, at its S. extricity, into the Firth of Clyde, by the river Leven—a name which anciently belonged to the lake itself. Several fine seats and ancient ruins adorn the shores of this "Queen of the Scottish Lakes," on which steamers now ply for the accommodation of numerous tourists. [BEN LOMOND.]

LOMZA, a town of Poland, palat. Augustow, cap. circ., on the Narev, 72 m. S.W. Suwalki. Pop. 3,300. It has an arsenal and paper mills.

LONDON, Londinium, Augusta, the cap. city of England, and metropolis and seat of gov. of the British empire; the city-proper, with the major part of the metropolis, being in the co. Middlesex, on the N. bank of the Thames, here crossed by 7 bridges; but several extensive quarters are on the S. side of the river, and the whole capital, with its suburbs, occupies parts of the 4 cos. of Middlesex, Surrey, Kent, and Essex. Lat. of St Paul's cathedral 51° 30' 8" N., lon. 0° 5' 7" W. of Greenwich observatory. Mean temp. of year 50° .6; winter 39° .3; summer 62° .8, Fahr. Annual fall of rain 24.4 inches. Subdivisions and pop. as follow:—

In addition to the above, the pas. of Chelsea, Hampstead, Greenwich, Lewisham, Camberwell, Wandsworth, Clapham, &c., have been included in the bills of mortality; the total pop. in 1841 being 1,948,211. Proportional addition would make the pop. in 1850, 2,240,000. No. of houses, 265,553. In middle of 12th century, the pop. of London was 40,000; in 1701 it was 674,000; in 1801, 864,845; in 1821, 1,225,694. Ann. number of deaths (1841) 45,753, or 1 in 40.9. The metropolis may be considered to extend from Limehouse on the E. to Kensington on the W., a distance of about 7½ m.; from Islington on the N. to Walworth on the S., upwards of 4 m.; bounded, for the most part, on the E. and N., round to N.W., by the Regent's canal, S.W. by the Kensington canal, and S. partially by the Grand Surrey canal, but beyond these limits are the extensive suburbs of Portland Town, Kentish Town, Holloway, Kingsland, and Hackney (with Victoria Park) on the N., Bow and Poplar on the

E., and New Cross, Peckham, Camberwell, Brixton, and Battersea on the S., from nearly all which the lines of road extending into the country are bordered for many miles by terraces and villas. The densely populated area above indicated is traversed S. of its centre from W. to E. by the Thames, which has a tortuous course through it from Chelsea Reach to the Isle of Dogs, considerably more than 3-4ths of the entire pop. residing on its N. side. The more important thoroughfares in London (N. of the Thames) run mostly E. and W. Starting from Cheapside and the Poultry, in the heart of the city, as a point to which many important routes converge, four lines pass off E.ward at the open space bounded by the Mausion House, the Bank of England, and the Royal Exchange,—viz., King William Street; Threadneedle Street; Lombard and Fenchurch Streets; and Cornhill, with its continuation Leadenhall Street; which two latter routes converge at Aldgate, and the united line is continued through Whitechapel and the Mile-end roads to Bow and Stratford. At the W. end of Cheapside, two great parallel lines lead off,—viz., that consisting of Newgate and Skinner Streets, Holborn, and Oxford Street, with the road extending thence on the N. side of Hyde Park to Bayswater; and the line formed of St Paul's Church-yard, Ludgate Street and Hill, Fleet Street, the Strand, Charing Cross, & Pall Mall, terminating at St James's Palace, and the Green Park. Intermediate to these two, is a line passing from Lincoln's Inn Fields, nearly in the centre of the town, through Great Queen Street, Long Acre, Cranbourne Street, Leicester Square, Piccadilly, Knightsbridge, and along the S. side of Hyde Park to Kensington. S. of the Thames, the principal thoroughfares diverge from the Elephant and Castle, or the Obelisk: those going N. mostly unite with others N. the river to cross the foregoing lines; and the chief of these crossing lines, S. to N., may be thus enumerated:—I. Watworth Road, Blackman and High Streets (Borough), London Bridge, King William and Bishopsgate Streets, Shoreditch and the Kingsland Road to Stoke Newington.—II. Blackfriars' Road and Bridge, Bridge and Farringdon Streets, thence prolonged by a street newly laid out to Clerkenwell Sessions-house, and which is to be prolonged direct to Islington.—III. Waterloo Road & Bridge, Wellington, Bow, Endell, Bloomsbury, Gower, and George Streets, and the Hampstead Road, leading to Camden Town and Hampstead.—IV. Westminster Road and Bridge, Parliament Street, Whitehall Place, Regent Street, and Portland Place, to the Regent's Park.—V. A waving line over Vauxhall Bridge and Road, through Grosvenor Place, Park Lane, & the Edgware Road, to Kilburn. Other important lines N. of the Thames are St Martin-le-Grand, with Goswell Street and Road; St John's Street and Road; Gray's Inn Street and Road, Tottenham Court Road, Bond Street, Audley and Baker Streets, Park Street and Gloucester Place, several of which at the W., or fashionable end of London, form perfectly straight and elegant vistas, full 1½ m. in length. From the city to Kensington Gardens, a semi-circular line, consisting of the City, New, and Grand Junction Roads, embraces most part of the metropolis on the N. & N.W., much in the same way as the boulevards enclose the major portion of Paris. The S., and especially the E. parts of the metropolis, are meanly or indifferently built, and, setting aside its immensity, a stranger entering London in those directions, is not apt to perceive much difference between its appearance and that of one of the less opulent provincial towns. But W. of Gray's Inn Lane and Temple Bar, the magnitude of the residences, and continuous lines of handsome streets cannot fail to attract observation; and although nearly the whole of London is built of brick, the stucco facings, and classic style of many of the buildings in the newer parts of the town, give the whole a highly imposing character. On every outskirts, particularly around the termini of the various railways, new quarters are springing up; this is eminently the case in the N. & W. In the reign of Geo. iv., Pimlico became a suburb, boasting of a good deal of architectural display; but although much building has been still progressing in that direction, opulence seems latterly to have preferred the N. side of Hyde Park, and between the Regent's Park and Bayswater, a very magnificent quarter is now rapidly extending. The parks are all, except St James's & the Green Park, still beyond the densely populated parts of the metropolis; they mostly contain ornamental lakes, are well planted, & surrounded with fine terraces, & form favourite promenades. The immediate banks of the Thames have little embellishment, being crowded mostly with wharfs and factories; the new and splendid Houses of Parliament, Somerset House, the Temple, Custom House, Fishmongers' Hall, the new Coal Exchange, and the Tower, are almost the only buildings of interest facing the stream. Across the Thames, E. to W., are London, Southwark, Blackfriars', Waterloo, Hungerford, or Charing Cross, Westminster, and Vauxhall bridges; and nearly 2 m. below the first is the tunnel carried by Brunel under its bed. The New London Bridge, a fine structure of stone, with 5 arches, and 928 feet in length, was completed in 1831 at a cost of 2,000,000*l.* Waterloo Bridge is a beautiful edifice of 9 arches, 1,242 feet in length, and completed in 1817, at the expense of 1,150,000*l.* Blackfriars' and Westminster bridges are also of stone; Southwark is of iron, Vauxhall of iron & stone, and Hungerford is a suspension bridge opened in 1845. London is distinguished amongst European capitals by the great number & beauty of its squares; of which the best known are Belgrave, Eaton, Grosvenor, Berkeley, St James's, Trafalgar, Hanover, Cavendish, and Portman squares in the W., & Russell, Bedford, Bloomsbury, Tavistock, Euston, and Brunswick squares, with Lincoln's Inn Fields toward the centre and N. part of the town. All of these are ornamented with gardens in their centre, except Trafalgar square (late Charing Cross), which is an open area containing two fountains, the Nelson column and statue, 162 feet in height, and the equestrian statues of Chas. I. and Geo. IV. The public ways of London are not so liberally ornamented with statues as those of many other European capitals; the principal are those of Canning, Pitt, Fox, the great Duke of Bedford, the Duke of York (on the column in St James's Park), Duke of Kent, equestrian figures of Geo. III. and of some other kings (mostly in obscure situations), and those of the Duke of Wellington, opposite the Exchange, and on the arch of Geo. IV. The most conspicuous public buildings of London are: St Paul's cathedral, in the W. part of the city, a noble structure of Grecian architecture, 510 feet in length, 250 feet in breadth, with a dome, 370 feet in height, & completed by Sir C. Wren, betw. 1675 and 1710, at a cost of 747,974*l.* The see of London comprises the co. Middlesex, with most part of the eos. Essex and Herts. Net income (1843)

12,481l. 8s. The Mansion House, Bank, New Royal Exchange, General Post Office, India, Custom, and South Sea houses, Mint, Christ's & Bartholomew's hospitals, the Goldsmiths' hall, Guildhall, Compter and Newgate prisons, Newgate and Fleet markets, and the Monument, are in the City, in which are also an extraordinary number of churches, with spires and towers of very various architecture. Immediately westward is Westminster, separated from the City by Temple Bar, and comprising Hyde, St James's, and the Green parks; Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, Courts of Law, Westminster hospital, and Sessions-house, all clustered together near Westminster bridge; the public offices in Downing Street and Whitehall, with an elegant new front, the Horse-guards and Admiralty; Northumberland house, St Martin's church, and the National Gallery, surrounding Trafalgar Square; the Italian opera house, and all the other principal theatres; Somerset House and King's College, St James' & Buckingham Palaces, the principal club-houses, and most of the residences of the nobility. Marylebone, forming the N.W. section of the metropolis, has an opulent population, and handsome and regular streets, several handsome churches, the Colosseum, Middlesex hospital, and terminus of the Great Western railway. Finsbury comprises the quarters N. of the city, and of a part of Westminster, and contains the British Museum, Lincoln's Inn and the New Law Courts, Foundling and St Luke's hospitals, University college and hospital, the terminus of the N.W. railway, the reservoir of the New River Company, Clerkenwell and Pentonville prisons, Gray's Inn, the London institution, Charter-house, St John's gate, and Smithfield market. The Tower-hamlets, in the E. and N.E., comprise the Tower, St Katherine's and London docks, the London hospital, numerous charitable institutions, Spitalfields, the great seat of the London silk manufacture, and the terminus of the E. cos. railway. Southwark contains St Saviour's church, Gny's and St Thomas' hospitals, the Queen's bench prison, Barclay and Co's brewery, and the united termini of S. and S.E. railways; and in Lambeth are the palace of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Bethlehem hospital, a new Roman Catholic cathedral, the Surrey, Victoria, & Astley's theatres, and the terminus of the S.W. railway. It is impossible here to enumerate even the principal of the charitable endowments and schools in the metropolis. London has, since 1837, been the seat of an university, with which numerous colleges throughout the country are in connection. Among its principal scientific associations are the Royal Society, the royal antiquarian, Linnæan, horticultural, medical and chirurgical, geological, geographical, astronomical, Asiatic, and zoological societies, with the statistical society, and Royal and London institutions. At the present time, 10 newspapers are published in London daily; and at a late period, it was estimated that 80 newspapers were issued at different weekly periods, and upwards of 320 other periodicals at various intervals. All kinds of manufs. are pursued in London; the principal are those of silk, beer, spirits, soap, vinegar, refined sugar, chemical articles, cutlery, machinery, watches & jewellery, coaches, furniture, and shipping. The silk manuf. is confined to Spitalfields; watchmaking is chiefly conducted in Clerkenwell. The cutlery made in the metropolis is of the finest quality. Many of the breweries are of enormous extent; that of Messrs Barclay, Perkins, & Co. in Southwark, is stated to cover 8 acres of ground. Ship-building is conducted chiefly E. of London Bridge, along Wapping and Rotherhithe to Deptford and Blackwall. The following passage from a periodical of 1843, although its estimates must be in general considered as only an approximation to the truth, will serve to impress the reader with some idea of the vastness of this great emporium.

"London, the largest and richest city in the world, occupies a surface of 32 square miles, thickly planted with houses, mostly three, four, and five stories high. It contains 300 churches & chapels of the Establishment; 364 Dissenters' chapels, 22 foreign chapels, 250 public schools, 1,500 private schools, 150 hospitals, 156 almshouses, besides 205 other institutions, 550 public offices, 14 prisons, 22 theatres, 24 markets; consumes annually 110,000 bullocks, 776,000 sheep, 250,000 lambs, 250,000 calves, and 270,000 pigs; 11,000 tons of butter, 13,000 tons of cheese, 10,000,000 gallons of milk, 1,000,000 quarters of wheat, or 64,000,000 of quatern loaves, 65,000 pipes of wine, 2,000,000 gallons of spirits, and 2,000,000 barrels of porter and ale; employs 16,502 shoemakers, 14,552 tailors, 2,391 blacksmiths, 2,013 whitesmiths, 5,030 house painters, 1,076 fish dealers, 2,662 hatters and hosiers, 13,208 carpenters, 6,822 bricklayers, &c., 5,416 cabinetmakers, 1,005 wheelwrights, 2,180 sawyers, 2,807 jewellers, 1,172 old-clothesmen (chiefly Jews), 4,388 printers (viz., 3,628 compositors, 700 pressmen), 1,393 stationers, 2,633 watch and clock-makers, 4,227 grocers, 1,430 milkmen, 5,655 bakers, 2,091 barbers, 1,040 brokers, 4,322 butchers, 1,586 cheesemongers, 1,082 chemists, 4,199 clothiers and linen-draper, 2,167 coachmakers, 1,367 coal merchants, 2,133 coopers, 1,381 dyers, 2,319 plumbers, 907 pastry-cooks, 869 saddlers, 1,246 tinnen, 803 tobacconists, 1,470 turners, 556 undertakers. (The above are all males above 20 years of age.) 10,000 private families of fashion, &c. About 77,000 establishments of trade & industry, 4,400 public houses, 330 hotels, 470 beer-shops, 960 spirit and wine shops. London Docks cover 20 acres; 14 tobacco warehouses, 14 acres; and the wine cellars, 8 acres, containing 22,000 pipes. The two West Indian Docks, cover 51 acres; St Katherine's Docks cover 24 acres; the Surrey Docks, on the opposite side, are also very large. There are generally about 5,000 vessels and 3,090 boats on the river, employing 8,000 watermen and 4,000 labourers. London pays about one-third of the window-duty in England, the number of houses assessed being about 120,000, rated at upwards of 5,000,000l. sterling. The house rental is probably 7,000,000l. or 8,000,000l."

It may be added that the metropolis is supplied with water by 8 companies, the total supply per day being estimated at upwards of 36,700,000 gallons, of which quantity, the New River company supplies nearly half. Twelve gas companies are supposed to furnish an aggregate of 1,460,000,000 cubic feet of gas annually, by the consumption of 180,000 tons of coal. In 1840, the importation of coal into London amounted to 2,561,880 tons. The port of London extends to Gravesend, 30 miles down the river, and from Limehouse to London-bridge, there is a continuous crowd of mercantile shipping, forming a sight unequalled elsewhere on the globe. Its exports of British produce, amounting in 1845 to 11,078,164l. in value, were considerably less than half the amount of those from Liverpool; but its import trade outweighs those of all the other ports of the empire, and Mr M'Culloch considers that it would "not be over-rated at the prodigious sum of 80,000,000l. sterling." (Geog. Dict., ii., 202.)—In 1839, the port was entered by 4,880 British ships, aggregate burden 988,867 tons; 2,375 foreign do., burden 356,163 tons; and 21,112 coasting vessels, burden 2,828,701 tons; making a total of 28,367 vessels, aggregate burden 4,174,731 tons. In 1845, the shipping entered from foreign ports (thus excluding coasters), amounted to 5,123 British ships, aggregate burden 1,109,387 tons; 2,439 foreign do., burden 393,104 tons. Total reg. shipping of port in 1840, 2,950 ships, burden 581,000 tons, and seamen 32,000. Gross customs rev. 1846, 10,885,156l. The city of London is divided into 26 wards, and governed by the Lord Mayor, who has an official income of 3,000l. a-year, and by the courts of aldermen and of common council, elected by the freemen. Annual corp. rev. is estimated at nearly 150,000l. Assessed taxes of city (1847) 88,210l.; of the city and whole metropolis bors. 650,687l., excluding the Tower-Hamlets, of which there is no published return. Of the 16 mems. sent to the H. of C. by the metropolis, the city returns 4.—Trinobantum, or the town of the Trinobantes, was probably the name of London at the Roman invasion. It was afterwards walled in, and became a Roman colony and place of great trade. It was the cap. of the East Saxons, and made a bishop's see in 610. In 804 it became the cap. of Engl. under Alfred the Great, & obtained its first charter from Wm. the Conqueror. In 1664, the plague cut off 40,000 of the inhabs., & the great fire in 1666, consumed 5-6ths of the city. [EINSBURY, LAMBETH, MARYLEBONE, SOUTH-WARK, TOWER-HAMLETS, and WESTMINSTER.]

LONDON, a dist. of Upper Canada. Pop. (1835) 41,241.—Chief town, London, co. Middlesex, on the Thames. Lat. 43° 2' N., Lon. 81° 22' W.

LONDON (NEW), a co., U. S., N. Amer., in S. E. of Connecticut. Area 600 sq. m. Pop. 44,463.—II. a city and sea port, cap. of above co., on the Thames, 3 m. from its entrance into Long Island Sound, lat. 41° 22' N., and lon. 72° 10' W. Pop. 5,519. It stands on sloping ground, and is not generally well built. Its harbour, one of the best in the States, is defended by 2 forts, and at its entrance has a light-house. It has a steam-engine factory, and manufs. of hardware, cutlery, leather, and ropes, and a considerable export trade with the W. Indies and Southern States, and whale and other fisheries. Tonnage of the port (1840) 44,822. It was first settled in 1646, and was burned by the British in 1781.

LONDONDERRY, or DERRY, a marit. co. of N. Ireland, Ulster, having N. the Atlantic Ocean & Loch Foyle, E. Antrim, from which it is separated by Loughs Neagh and Beg, S. Tyrone, & W. Donegal. Area 810 sq. m., or 518,270 ac., of which about 320,000 are cultivated; 180,000 waste, and 10,000 water. Inhabited houses 38,657. Pop. 222,174. Surface in the S. and centre mntinous; elsewhere mostly lowland. Primary granite rocks form the basis of the district, with secondary sandstones, and overlying trap rocks. Coast line low. Chief rivers, the Foyle, Bann, and Roe. Climate mild, mean ann. temp. of the cap. 49° Fahr.; mean annual depth of rain 34 inches. Soils various, but on the lowlands mostly fertile. Agriculture is improving. Oats, potatoes, flax, and wheat, are the principal crops. Breeds of live stock inferior. Poultry numerous, and eggs are extensively exported. Estates large, and mostly owned by the 12 London companies, to which the county was granted by Jas. I., after forfeiture, by the rebellion of its native chiefs. Hence the prefix of London to the anc. name of the co. Farms held under leases both terminable and interminable, and often very small. Rent of land varies from 5s. to 2l. 10s. an ac. Manufs. of linen extensive. The co. is divided into 6 baronies and liberties, and 31 pas. in the dioceses of Armagh and Derry. Principal towns, Londonderry and Coleraine. It sends 4 mems. to H. of C., 2 being for the co. Reg. electors (1848) 4,982.—II. a fortified city, parl. & munic. borough, & riv. port, cap. above co., on the broad & navigable Foyle, here crossed by a wooden bridge, 1,068 feet in length, above its entrance into Loch Foyle, 120 m. N.N.W. Dublin. Lat. of bridge, 54° 59' 6" N., lon. 7° 19' W. It stands magnificently on a ridge projecting into the river, and is enclosed by walls and bastions built in 1609, and beyond which large suburbs now extend. It has 4 main streets, leading from a fine central square, on the summit ridge, towards the 4 city gates; these are broad, clean, well paved and lighted, and most of the other streets are well built, though within the city walls, very steep, & lined with antique houses. Princip. buildings, the cathedral, a Gothic pile without transepts, built 1633, & having a modern tower & spire 178 ft. in height. The bishop's palace, a large plain structure; the deanery; places of worship and schools, for various religious denominations; a diocesan free grammar school or college, founded in 1617, and which, together with Gwynn's school, is munificently endowed; a valuable diocesan and public libraries; a town-hall, rebuilt in 1826, and containing assembly and news rooms; a large court-house, county jail, district lunatic asylum, infirmary and fever hospital, union workhouse, spacious barracks, an elegant monument in honour of the Rev. G. Walker, the celebrated defender of the city during its memorable siege; a custom-house and town-hall. The town has also a literary and mechanics institute; and numerous industrial, charitable, & other schools; 3 or 4 newspapers; several branch banks, many flour mills, a copper foundry, large distillery, small manufs. of table linen, and extensive exports of oats, flour, eggs, salted provisions, butter, live stock, flax, and linens. Imports of British manufs., coal, timber, wine, sugar, and tea; trade chiefly with Liverpool and Glasgow, now greatly facilitated by steamers. Numerous emigrants sail hence for the U. States and Canada. Customs' revenue (1844) 90,771l. Reg. shipping (1844) 7,933 tons. Vessels of 600 tons ascend the Foyle to the city quays. Markets, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Londonderry sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,938. It was built in its present form by the "Irish Society," or London companies, who colonised and gave name to the co.; and it is famous in history for the siege it so heroically sustained in 1689, under a clerical commander, against the forces of James II. A few cannon used in this defence, are still on the city walls.

MADAGASCAR, an island of the Indian Ocean, separated from the S.E. coast of Africa by the channel of Mozambique, situated between lat. 11° 57' (C. Amber) & 25° 38' (C. St. Mary) S., and lon. 43° 20' (C. St. Vincent) and 50° 31' (C. East) E. Length 1,030 m., greatest breadth 350 m. Pop. variously estimated at from 1,600,000 to 4,000,000. Surface flat on the coasts, but in the interior elevated mountains divide the island into numerous well watered valleys. Climate hot on the coasts, temperate in the interior, but everywhere unfavourable to Europeans. Soil generally very fertile, with rich pasturage and magnificent forests. Chief vegetable productions, medicinal plants, pepper, cotton, indigo, sugar cane, tobacco, rice, manioc. Domestic animals comprise bisons, sheep, swine, dogs, & cats. Silk worms are reared. Honey and wax are procured in great abundance in the woods, which swarm with bees. The mountains supply gold, silver, copper, lead, and iron, which last is mined to a considerable extent. Coal is used in smelting, and there is a coal mine near the cap., and another near Diego-Suarez. The inhabitants manuf. iron utensils, and work in gold and silver articles, as chains, necklaces, & ear-rings. Carpets are made at Tananarivo, & cotton goods are extensively manufactured. Sugar mills have been lately introduced, and at Mahala 3,000 men are employed in the manuf. of sugar. Trade is conducted chiefly with the Portuguese settlers on the E. coast of Africa. Exports, native produce. Imports, linen, ribbons, glass, and Spanish piastres. The inhabitants consist of Malagashes, Ovas, and other tribes of Papuan, Malay, Arabian, and Kafir origin. The island is divided into 28 provs., each having a chief subject to one of the Ovas, with the title of king, whose cap., Tananarivo, is near the centre of the isl. Tamatave is the chief commercial town. Fetichism is the prevailing superstition. European missionaries were protected by one of the late kings, when civilization made considerable progress, but in 1835 Christianity was prohibited, and in 1845 all Europeans were expelled. This island was known to the Arabs in the 13th century, under the name of Zaledj; it was first called Madagascar by Marco Polo. In 1642, the French settled on it, and called it "Ile Dauphine;" they have since made several attempts to colonize it, but without success.

MADEIRA ISLES, a group in the Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Portugal, from the S.W. coast of which they are distant 660 m. S.W. They consist of the isls. Madeira and Porto Santo, and the islets called the Desertas, situated between lat. 32° 23' 15" and 33° 7' 50" N., and lon. 16° 13' 30" and 16° 38' W. The largest isl., Madeira, is 31 m. long and 12 m. broad. Pop. (1842) 100,000. Cap. Funchal. It consists of a mass of volcanic rocks, which in Pico Ruivo rise to 6,056 feet in elevation. From the central mass steep ridges extend to the coast, where they form precipices of 1,000 to 2,000 feet in height. The only plains are a small portion of the W. coast, & the table land of Paul de Serra in the interior. The roads are very steep, and unfit for carriages. Oxen are the only beasts of draught, and ponies are used in travelling. Climate remarkably equable, and celebrated for its salubrity, on which account numerous visitors, afflicted with disease of the lungs, constantly resort to Madeira. The soil, which on the S. side extends 2½ m. inland, is well watered, and extremely productive. The vine is the chief article of cultivation, it grows to an elevation of 2,000 feet, but the best wine is produced at an elevation of less than 1,000 feet. Sugar, once extensively cultivated, is now neglected. Coffee is grown of superior quality, and the arrow root is excellent. The orange, banana, and guava, are abundant. Wheat, maize, beans, & barley, are cultivated to a small extent, but quite insufficient for home consumption. The failure of the potato, formerly the chief support of the pop. of the vills. and remote districts, has added to the existing distress, and the condition of the lower orders is that of squalid poverty. Begging is universal. Madeira was settled by the Portuguese in 1431. [FUNCHAL.]

In the centre is a table land consisting of the Balaghaut ceded dists. (Bellary and Cuddapah), with Mysore, &c., bounded by the E. and W. Ghauts, these chains uniting near lat. 11° N., lon. 76° 30' to 77° E., in the Neigherry hills, the elevation of one peak of which, Dodabittus, is estimated at 8,760 feet. On every side the country descends from the Ghauts progressively to the sea, but more rapidly on the W. than the E. side, in which latter region, extensive plain tracts stretch along the Coromandel coast. Principal rivers, the Godavery, Kistnah, Pennaar, Palaur, Punnair, Cavery, and Coleroon, all flowing to the E. coast; where also are many salt lagoons, the principal being that of Colair. Rice, paddy, wheat, barley, maize, and all the grains common in India are here raised; other products are sugar cane, cotton, pepper, tobacco, hemp, areca, ginger, and numerous fine fruits, with teak timber from the Ghauts; coir, cocoa nuts, ebony and sandal wood, iron and copper ores, soda, nitre, and diamonds. Except in the N. circars, where the zemindary prevails, the land is mostly assessed on the ryotwar system, by which the government collector is in immediate contact with the cultivator, who is annually assessed according to his crop, or the land he cultivates. [INDIA.] The principal cultivated land is in the dists. Rajahmundry, Coimbatore, and Tanjore, which last may be called the granary of the presidency. Manufs. of cotton cloths, formerly extensive, are carried on in all the E. dists; those of Tinnevely being exported to the W. Indies and America; and the red cloths of Madura, muslins of Chicacole, carpets of Ellore, & silks of Berhampore still maintain some celebrity, though they have long begun to be superseded by British manufs. Iron, saltpetre, and salt are among the principal manufd. products. The foreign trade is mostly monopolized by Madras, the cap. Government is vested in a governor, subordinate to the governor-general of India, a council of three members, and secretaries of the political, civil, and military departments. In each of the dists. is a European collector with the chief magisterial power; & provincial courts of appeal are located at Chittoor, Masulipatam, Trichinopoly, and Tellicherry; Madras having the supreme court and some special tribunals. Total gross revenue (1844-5) 4,996,329*l.*, of which the land revenue amounted to 3,378,188*l.* Net revenue in same year 3,746,578*l.*; total expenditure 3,711,553*l.* The territories of this presid. were nearly all acquired by the British during the latter half of the 18th century.

MADRAS, a maritime city of British India, cap. above presid., on the Coromandel coast, lat. of observatory 13° 4' 1" N., lon. 80° 14' E. Pop. of its dist. of 30 sq. m., in 1836-7, estimated at 630,000 persons, of whom, the city and suburbs, within 2½ m. around Fort George, comprise from 300,000 to 400,000. It is badly situated for a commercial cap., on a surf-beaten shore, where rafts (catamarans) are obliged to be used to land passengers and all kinds of merchandise. It stands on level ground; it has no striking appearance from the sea, but it is generally well built and handsome. Fort George, the citadel, is on the beach, surrounded by an esplanade, on the N. side of which, is the "black town," partly enclosed by a brick wall, and containing many good native houses, with European warehouses, the custom-house, board of trade, & court-house; on the W. & S. sides of the fort, separated from the town by a river, is Choultry-plain, on which are some extensive suburbs, consisting mostly of detached houses, occupied by Europeans; and here are also the residences of the governor and the Carnatic nabob, St George's cathedral, and a handsome stone mosque. Other chief buildings are several Episcopal and Armenian churches, an elegant Scotch church, Independent, Wesleyan, and Unitarian chapels, the cenotaph to the Marquis Cornwallis, &c. Madras is the seat of a university, a medical college, Bishop Corrie's grammar schools, various other schools, and several literary associations. At the suburb, St Thomé, on the shore, about 3 m. S. from the fort, are a Roman Catholic cathedral and some chapels, this being the place where most of the inhabitants of Portuguese descent reside. Madras is the seat of all the chief government offices for the presid., of the supreme court, boards of revenue, admiralty, education, &c.; & though having less foreign trade than the caps. of the other presid., its commerce is still considerable, as it is the chief emporium of the Coromandel coast, and trades direct with Great Britain and the other European countries, the United States, Ceylon, and S.E. Asia. Principal imports are rice and other grains chiefly from Bengal; cotton piece goods, twist, and metallic wares from Great Britain; raw silk, areca, betel, gold dust, spices, and teak timber from Pegu; spirits and wines, coral beads, horses, drugs, to the total value, in 1841-2, of 1,050,028*l.* Exports of cotton stuffs & wool, indigo, pepper, timber, coffee, & other native produce, amounted in the same year to 2,284,270*l.* The site of the city formed the first territorial acquisition by the British in India, permission to erect a fort here having been obtained in 1639.

A mountain range crosses the isl. from S.W. to N.E. Numerous streams water the valleys. Greywacke and schistose strata prevalent, with limestone, marl, and peat moss. Copper, zinc, and lead ores, are found, with some seams of coal. Soil sandy in some places, but fertile in others. Climate mild, and winter open, though rain & gales of wind are frequent. Mean summer temp. 50°; winter 41° .7; annual mean, 49° .8 Fahr. Snafeld rises to 2,000 feet. About 100,000 ac. are in tillage, or cultivable, & 54,000 do. unproductive. Agriculture has improved of late, with the decline of the herring fishery, and a surplus of wheat and barley over the home demand is raised. Flax, oats, potatoes, and clover are the crops next in importance. An excellent small breed of horses is reared; cattle and small sheep are tolerably numerous. Farms range from 10 to 200 ac., and rents vary from 5s. to 3l. an ac. Small properties are less numerous than formerly, many having fallen by mortgage into the estates of English and Scotch residents. The herring and other fisheries off the coasts were, until lately, of considerable importance, and from July to Oct. they are still frequented by Manx, Cornish, Welsh, and Irish boats. In 1844, 352 boats, of from 14 to 21 tons, paid a duty (now abolished) for fishing. The island has limestone, slate, and marble quarries, and some mining operations. The women weave woollen, linen, & cotton fabrics; there are some bleaching works, but few manufg. establs. Princip. exports, corn, potatoes, eggs, lime, stone, ore, fish, linens, & sailcloth; imports, spirits, wine, colonial products, & manufactured goods. Reg. shipping (1836) 242 vessels, aggregate burden 7,229 tons. Gross customs revenue (1846) 26,662l., net do. 12,514l. This island, originally peopled by the Manx (Menaviæ), a tribe of the Celtic race, was alternately possessed by the Scotch under the Lord of the Isles, and English. It was latterly held as a feudal sovereignty by the Stanleys, and afterwards by the dukes of Athol, from whom it was purchased for the British crown in 1806; and finally in 1826, certain remaining privileges were ceded by the duke on receiving an award of 416,000l. Government vested in the British sovereign, or the lieutenant of the crown, a council of the bishops and principal functionaries, and the House of Keys, a body of 24 proprietors of estates, who possess the legislative power. The island has its own laws, and two supreme judges, called deemsters. Common law courts are held in the 6 sheadings into which Man is divided, and appeals lie from their decisions successively to the House of Keys, the governor, and the sovereign in council. The isl. is subdivided into 21 pas. Established religion that of the Church of England, under the bishop of Sodor & Man, who has a seat (without a vote) in the British House of Peers. Each pa. has its endowed school, in which English is taught as well as the native Manx, a dialect of the Celtic. The island was a great station of the druids, and contains numerous vestiges of their circles. Principal towns, CASTLETOWN, the cap., PEEL, DOUGLAS, and RAMSAY.—Man is also an island, S. MANCHESTER, a city, parl. and munic. bor., and pa. of England, co. Lancaster, hund. Salford, the town on the Irwell, across which it communicates by 6 bridges with the adjacent bor., Salford, on the W., and conjointly with which it is the chief seat of the cotton manufacture in S. Britain, 32 m. E.N.E. Liverpool, 161 m. N.N.W. London. Area of pa., including the borough Salford, 34,260 ac. Inhabited houses, 45,665. Pop., in 1801, 110,938; in 1841, 353,390, of whom 240,367 were in the bor. of Manchester, and 66,284 in that of Salford. The town stands in a plain, and consists, with Salford, of a dense mass of buildings, extending about 2 m. from E. to W., by somewhat less from N. to S., and covering about 3,000 acres. The Irk and Medlock rivers join the Irwell close to the town, and with it are extensively made use of to impel machinery. The town is irregularly laid out, and comprises at least 800 streets. Principal thoroughfares are Market Street, Piccadilly, and the London Road, Oldham and Great Ancoat Streets, Quay, Peter, Bond, and Morley Streets, & the Oxford & Chester roads. Many of the newer public ways and open spaces are handsome, such as Portland Place, Grosvenor Square, Mosley Street, Ardwick Green, and Salford Crescent; and between the London and Oxford roads is Victoria Park, occupying 140 acres. The exchange, in the mkt. place, is a large semicircular building, adorned with Doric pillars. The town hall, of Ionic architecture, contains a noble public room. The corn exchange, royal infirmary, and lunatic asylum, atheneum, royal institution, news room, union club house, natural history society's hall, concert hall, assembly rooms, Salford and Choriton town halls, asylums for the blind, and for the deaf and dumb, a royal, and some other theatres, the barracks, Victoria bridge, and the numerous mills and warehouses, are among the most conspicuous edifices. The collegiate church (now erected into a cathedral), was founded in the 15th century. The see includes nearly all the co. Lancaster; bishop's revenue, 4,500l. a-year. Trinity church, at Salford, St Luke's, Cheetham, and St George's, Hulme, are the only other churches demanding especial notice. There are 4 R. Catholic, 9 Independent, 6 Baptist, 6 Swedenborgian, 5 Unitarian, and a great number of Wesleyan, besides other chapels, most of which have charity schools attached to them, which, in 1835, gave instruction to 33,196 children in Manchester, and 9,754 in Salford. The grammar school, founded in 1520, has a rev. of upwards of 4,500l. a-year, and 16 exhibitions of 60l. a-year to the universities, 16 scholarships at Brazen-nose college Oxford, others at Cambridge, and additional privileges for its pupils at those seats of learning. Cheetham college, or blue-coat school, has 80 scholars, a library of 25,000 vols., and a museum. Manchester new college, removed from York in 1840, is the principal Unitarian college in England, and is in connection with the university of London. The royal school of medicine, Lancashire independent college, the royal Lancasterian school, which educates 1,400 children; and the Juhilee school for 40 girls, are among the chief public institutions. Scientific establishments are very numerous, and comprise the royal institution, literary and philosophical, statistical, geological, phrenological, architectural, botanical, and natural history societies, mechanics' institutions, a school of design, and the Victoria gallery. Charitable institutions are also numerous; among them are the infirmary, fever, lying-in, eye, and lock hospitals. It has a branch of the bank of England, 5 joint-stock banks, and 5 weekly newspapers. In 1836, it was estimated that 254,500 carcases of butcher meat were annually consumed here. Mkts., Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. The proximity of an abundance of coal, the improvements introduced into spinning & weaving machinery by Hughes, Arkwright, Hargreaves, and Crompton, and the application of steam power, have raised Manchester to its eminence of monopolizing 2-3ds of the cotton manufacture of Great Britain. Its manufs. are mostly conducted in large mills or factories; of these in 1839, there were estimated to be 186, employing 38,449 hands; of which 163, employing 34,039 persons, were for cotton, and 19, with 4,152 hands, for silk goods. The steam force used in 1838, in these establishments in Manchester and Salford, was estimated at 9,924 horse-power. Woollen fabrics, machinery, hats, paper, ropes, twine, pins, and numerous other goods are made in large quantities; and there are many bleaching and chemical works, and breweries. Total exports in 1835, valued at 12,000,000l. Customs rev. 187,922l. Manchester communicates with Birmingham and London by the Grand Junction (N.W.) railway, & by other railways and canals with Liverpool, Bolton, Preston, Rochdale, Sheffield, and all the large towns of N. England. The munic. bor. is divided into 15 wards, and governed by a mayor, recorder, 15 aldermen, and 48 councillors. It has courts of quarter sessions, record, and requests, and a court-baron held every Wednesday three weeks; and, independent of Salford, it sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 12,836. Under the Romans, a station termed Mancunium, was erected on a part of its site. Among its eminent natives may be noticed the celebrated Duke of Bridgewater, the chemists Dalton and Henry, and Sir R. Peel, the father of the late premier.

(1846) 367,309. Chief rivers, the Marne, and the Seine. A great part of the dep. is comprised in the dist. formerly called Champagne-Pouilleuse. Its sandy plains, formerly naked, have been lately planted with Scotch pines. Grain is raised more than necessary for consumption. The vine forms the principal produce of the dep.; the best wines are those of Reims and Epernay. Chief minerals are mill-stones. Principal industry, manufs. of woollens and bonnets. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Châlons, Epernay, Reims, Ste. Menchould, and Vitry-le-Français.

MARNE (HAUTE), a dep. of France in the N.E., formed of part of the old prov. Champagne, between the deps. Meuse, Marne, Aube, Côte-d'Or, H. Saône, and Vosges. Area 2,482 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 262,079. Chief rivers, the Marne, which, as well as the Meuse and Aube, rises in the dep. It is traversed in the E. & S. by the mountains which separate the Meuse and Rhone, united by the plateau of Langres in the N.E. Grain is raised more than sufficient for consumption. The dep. has some of the most important iron mines in France. The wine is of good quality, and timber furnishes the principal article of export. Chief industry, mining and forging of iron, cutlery, cotton-spinning, and weaving. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Chaumont, Langres, and Vassy.

MAROCCHO, or MOROCCO (Arab. Moghrib-ul-Acsa, "the extreme west"), ancient Mauritania, a country of N.W. Africa, between lat. 28° and 36° N., and lon. 0° 40' and 11° 40' W., having E. and S.E. the Desert, N.E. Algeria, W. the Atlantic, and N. the Mediterranean Sea. Area estimated at 220,000 sq. m. (or a little larger than France), and pop. at 8,500,000, of whom about 3,550,000 are Moors, 3,750,000 Berbers and Shellocks, 740,000 Bedouins, and 339,500 Jews. Surface mountainous, covered with ramifications of Mount Atlas but comprising many fine plains & valleys. Princip. rivs., the Mahala, flowing into the Mediterranean; and the Sebu, Morbeya, Tensift, and Susa, entering the Atlantic; and the Draha, beyond the Atlas. Climate healthy. Temp. seldom beyond 85° Fahr. Soil in the valleys celebrated in antiquity for its great fertility: and yielding, in some places, three crops of corn in one year; but so little is agriculture understood, that large crops of corn are sometimes suffered to remain unreaped, and at other times many of the inhabitants die of famine. Princip. crops, fine wheat, maize, millet, & barley, dates, grapes, olives, sugar-cane, cotton, tobacco, the fruits of S. Europe, cork, and henna. Timber for building is not generally abundant, and is imported from Spain. The grass lands are rich, and feed a fine race of horses, the exportation of which is prohibited; besides large numbers of sheep, goats, oxen, and mules. Camels and asses are the principal beasts of burden. Mineral products comprise iron, copper, & antimony. The domestic manufs. comprise woollen and cotton fabrics. Leather is made in large quantities in most of the towns; red caps, silk fabrics, good saddlery, carpets, chip-baskets and earthenwares, are among the chief articles manufactured. A trade with the Levant is carried on by the Mecca and other caravans, and by feluccas coasting along the shores of Barbary; there is also a communication by caravans, with Timbuctoo and other places in Cent. Africa, where the Morocco traders exchange salt, dates, tobacco, cloth, caps, girdles, and daggers, for gold dust, ivory, rhinoceros' horns, assafotida, ostrich feathers, and slaves. Exports to Europe, mostly to Leghorn, Marseille, and the Spanish ports, consist of wax, hides, skins, olive oil, gums, wool, dates, honey, indigo, shawls, carpets, &c. Government is more despotic than in most Mohammedan states, the rule of the sovereign being apparently all but unlimited. The empire consists of the kingdom of Morocco, Fez, and the territories Sus, Draha, and Tafilet; and is subdivided into 28 provs. Princip. cities and towns, Morocco, Fez, Mequinez, Rabat, Sallee, Tarudant, Tituan, Tesa, Mogadore, and Tangier, which, with other caps. of provs., are governed by military prefects. The towns are chiefly inhabited by Moors and Jews, which latter conduct the larger mercantile transactions; the Berbers and Shellocks form the bulk of the agricultural pop.; and the Arabs generally lead a wandering life on the plains, living in tents, and subsisting on the produce of their herds and flocks. Arts and science are at a low ebb; though, in most of the cities and towns are Mohammedan colleges, the princip. of which is at Fez. The standing army amounts to about 11,000 men, half of whom are negroes. Navy comprises only a few brigs and smaller vessels.—(For full particulars see Gräberg of Hemsö, Specchio dell' Impero Marocco; and the Geog. Journal, vol. i.) [FEZ.]

MAROCCHO (Arab. Marak'sh), the cap. city of the empire Morocco, is situated in a fertile plain, near the river Tensift, 125 m. E. Mogadore. Lat. 31° 37' 20" N.; lon. 7° 36' W. Pop. estimated (1844) at 100,000. It is enclosed by a strong turretted wall 30 feet in height, and 6 m. in circ., in the interior of which are many large fields and open spaces strewn with ruins. The city is ill built and filthy; most of its houses are constructed of only earth and lime, and those of a more substantial kind, together with its extensive aqueducts, are chiefly in decay. Princip. edifices, the Emperor's palace, separately enclosed by walls, and occupying, with its gardens, a space 3 m. in circ.; numerous mosques, several having much beauty, and one of which has a tower 221 ft. in height; a large bazaar, & an hospital, calculated for 1,500 patients. The city has 11 entrance gates, one of which, like many other public buildings, is richly ornamented with arabesque work. The streets are crossed by numerous arches and walls, and the several quarters are separated in a similar manner: that belonging to the Jews is  $1\frac{1}{2}$  m. in circuit. Outside of the city are extensive cemeteries, and a quarter especially appropriated to lepers. Princip. manufs. are of leather and embroidery, and the chief export trade is in those articles & in salt. Morocco was founded in A.D. 1073.

It is enclosed by bastioned walls, & has a cathedral, several convents & abbeys, a gymnasium, large cavalry barracks, an old castle, and a curious vibrating bell-tower. Its ancient port was filled up in 1580 by Don John of Austria, to prevent its becoming useful to corsairs; and the new port, about 1 m. S., bounded by a mole, is adapted only for small vessels. The princip. importance of Marsala is due to its wine trade, which has grown up within the present century, and in which many English houses are now engaged. The dist. is estimated to yield annually about 30,000 pipes of wine, of which 2-3ds are exported. Marsala also exports corn, cattle, oil, salt, and soda, in small quantities.—Lilybaeum was long the cap. of the Carthaginian dom. in Sicily, but few of its vestiges remain.

Paris, around a basin adjoining the Mediterranean, & on the E. coast of the Gulf of Lion. Lat. of observatory (95 feet in elevation) 43° 17' 8" N., lon. 5° 22' 2" E. Pop. (1846) 133,216. Mean temp. of year 57°.5; winter 43°; summer 74°.2 Fahr. It is composed of an old and a new town, the former on heights, with numerous crooked streets; the latter, which comprises two-thirds of its extent, has wide and straight streets. Marseille has few public buildings of architectural importance, except the hôtel de Ville; its lazaretto is the largest in the world. The harbour, though the receptacle of the fifth of the city, is the most commercial in France, & capable of containing 1,200 vessels; its entrance, which admits only 1 vessel at a time, is defended by 2 hills, surmounted by fort St Jean and fort St Nicolas, and the road is defended by the fortified islands, Château d'If, Pomègue, and Ratonneau. It has a tribunal of commerce, a national academy of sciences, letters and arts, an academy of medicine, and many other learned societies; a national college, with a library of 45,000 vols.; a school of hydrography, an astronomical observatory, a botanic garden, many benevolent institutions, several museums, and a mint. There are numerous fountains in the old and new town, but the supply of water has long been very deficient; to remedy this, a canal has recently been cut from the Durance. Marseille has manufs. of all kinds, the chief are soap, chemical products, bonnets, shoes, perfumery, olive oil and liqueurs. It has also tanneries, sugar, sulphur, and salt refineries, and manufs. of tobacco. Its commerce in the wines and fruits of the South, cork, and anchovies, which has flourished for 24 centuries, extends to all parts of the world. It is the birth-place of the astronomer Pytheas, the preacher Mascaron, and the sculptor Puget. Marseille, founded by the Phœnicians in 600 B.C., served as a refuge for them from the vengeance of Cyrus. It soon became the entrepôt for all the surrounding countries, founded many fine colonies, was long celebrated for the cultiv. of letters and arts, preserved its liberty under the Romans, and often acted as an independent republic. It communicates by railways with Arles, Avignon, Nîmes, and Lyon. Louis XI. united it to the crown of France in 1481. It suffered severe ravages from the plague in 1720.
